Falwell Declares War on Roberta

by Mike Salinas and David O'Connor

Jerry Falwell, sworn enemy of the lesbian and gay community, has just escalated the conflict.

Falwell, through his group, the so-called "Liberty Alliance," has begun sending conservatives a computer-generated letter seeking financial support for his organization by rallying his faithful around the issue of San Francisco Supervisor Roberta Achtenberg's nomination to the "high ranking position of assistant secretary for fair Housing and equal opportunity in the Department of Housing and Urban Development."

Achtenberg is, of course, an out lesbian, the notion of which sends Falwell into paroxysms of rage and blustering verbiage: "Mr. Clinton has crossed the line and his nomination of Achtenberg sets a terrible precedent for America," he writes—approximately one inch above his plea for "gifts" of $25 or more.

The mailing uses computer technology to pre-print every letter with postcards bearing the names and addresses of the senators representing the recipient's district, with instructions to sign and return them to Liberty Alliance.

Clinton Starts Wimping Out

United Press International

WASHINGTON — Facing persistent questions about his moves to allow gays to serve in the military, President Clinton said Tuesday he wouldn't rule out restricting their deployment if the arguments merit such an action.

Speaking to reporters at his first formal news conference, Clinton also said he had no "problem being commander in chief" despite his lack of personal service and recent signs of disrespect among the ranks.

"No, I don't have a problem being commander in chief," Clinton said.

He put down a lot of the opposition — including some criticism voiced two weeks ago when he paid a visit to an aircraft carrier — to the fact that "a lot of the service officers disagreed" with his position with respect to gays in the military.

Before making any final decision on that issue, he said he would await the recommendations of Defense Secretary Les Aspin, who "has not been in the best of health," and that a planned review of the controversial question would begin soon.

Soon after taking office, Clinton moved to make good on a campaign promise to end discrimination against gays in the military and, facing enormous opposition from within the military and on Capitol Hill, postponed any action pending a six-month review.

However, a proposed task force at the Pentagon to study the issue has not yet been formed.

Asked if he was prepared to restrict the deployment of gays, and whether that would violate his pledge to end discrimination, Clinton said, "That depends on what the report says. ... But I wouldn't rule that out, depending on what the grounds and arguments were."

And questioned on the constitutionality of such an arrangement, Clinton said, "I would think you could make appropriate distinctions on duty assignments once they're in. The courts have historically given quite wide berth to the military to make judgments of that kind in terms of duty assignments." ▼

Meholick Attorney Broke, Case Refused by Lambda

by David O'Connor

While sailor Larry Meholick awaits his March 25 parole hearing on a six-year sentence for forced sodomy, his attorney faces eviction from his Illinois office and fears he will not be able to pursue Meholick's case.

Meholick is in maximum security at Ft. Leavenworth in Kansas after being convicted in 1991 of forcing other sailors to have sex. Meholick's attorney, Bob Spriggs, said his client was wrongly convicted by the Navy in retaliation for Meholick's exposing a superior officer's misappropriation of funds.

In appealing Meholick's conviction, Spriggs returned to law practice after a 25-year hiatus. Spriggs, who said he took the case because of its gross injustice, ran his own executive search company until the economy soured. Now Spriggs is behind in rent on his office and his landlord has given him until the end of the week to pay up or get out.

"We're getting down to pay dirt time in this case," Spriggs said. "That's the time when you throw your best efforts. We need some good legal help to make sure that whatever we've got to throw up at the Navy, we've given it

San Francisco AIDS Foundation

by Jeff Fast

Since its inception over a decade ago, the San Francisco AIDS Foundation has become a highly visible institution. To some it is an international leader at educating the public and providing services for people with AIDS; others publicly wonder exactly what it does in its suite of offices — the rent on which is claimed to be $272,000 per year — to justify its existence. Whatever the perception, exist it does: with 66 employees and a budget of $5.7 million, it does so as one of the largest and wealthiest private AIDS organizations in the world.

The organization was originally established in 1992 as part of the KS (Kaposi's Sarcoma) Foundation by a group of gay and lesbian activists. Within months it had volunteers staffing a telephone hotline, and in 1984 it became the San Francisco AIDS Foundation.

Today, SFAF annually receives 100,000 calls from around the world on its AIDS hotline, and also educates the public through brochures and media campaigns. It provides emergency housing for AIDS patients and has had success at getting PWAs on public assistance.

But during the past three years the foundation has concentrated more on increasing salaries and benefits and establishing a pension plan than on expanding its client services and programs. Travel expenses have quadrupled. A lot of money is being spent at SFAF, and a lot invested: in 1992, it sunk more than a million dollars of the donations it received into treasury bills and mutual funds.

Patricia Christen, SFAF's executive director since July, 1989, said in a recent interview that she welcomed the Bay Area Reporter's inquiry into the organization's finances.

"We're audited and we're audited aggressively, and we welcome it," said Christen. "We have nothing to hide."

The finances

One-third, or $1.8 million, of SFAF's $5.7 million budget comes from city, state, and federal government grants. The other $3.9 million is raised from the private sector and from interest on investments.

The size of SFAF's overall budget during Christen's tenure has increased by only $200,000, while payroll and benefits has increased by $365,000 — even though there are four fewer employees now than in 1989. Christen said that more was being spent for fewer workers because SFAF has many HIV-positive employees, for whom health insurance is costly.

The foundation's major program expenditures are the AIDS Information Hotline, educational campaigns, counseling services, and the emergency housing program. The amount SFAF publicly claims to spend on those services and the amount indicated by tax returns vary.

"We spend 70 percent [of the total budget, on services] and we'd like it to be 75," Christen told the B.A.R.

But only 54 percent of SFAF's total budget, or $3.1

'Bill of Rights' Introduced In Sacto — But Not for You

by Marghe Covino
B.A.R. Capitol Correspondent

SACRAMENTO—Avowed christian right stalwart State Assemblyman Tim Leslie (R-Carmel/Bay-Sacramento) introduced a new state constitutional amendment last week, called the Senate Constitutional Amendment 18. For constitutional scholars, SCA 18 would amend State Constitution Section I and add Section 31 to Article I, relating to families. For non-scholars, the measure would enact a so-called "Family Bill of Rights," which states that a family — as defined by Leslie — is a "natural and legal relationship entitled to the highest constitutional recognition and protections."

Jerry Sloan, of Sacramento-based Project Tocsin, is concerned at the proposed legislation's attempt to exclude any but the "narrowest so-called 'christian' interpretation of family from official definition."

"And from there," Sloan told the Bay Area Reporter, "it will be easier for theocratic right to prevent any other couples and families to receive recognition or benefits due them as citizens and taxpayers."

Sloan termed Leslie's measure, which would provide a sweeping application of its intent to all government activities, "pernicious — an evil, destructive thing."

"These repressive measures and laws always lead me to wonder why the recognition or sanction of other families and relationships is so frightening to them [the christian right]," Sloan said. "What does it take away from them — from their lives? Are their relationships so tenuous that the mere recognition of another configuration would somehow spoil or demean what they hold so dear? Mr. Leslie has yet to learn there are many kinds of love and many expressions of it — and all of it is far preferable to the kind of hatred he and his cohorts are inflicting in the state houses across this country with their initiatives and measures and amendments."

The thing itself

The text of Leslie's amendment reads:

WHEREAS, Civilizations are established and cultures are preserved and transmitted primarily by families, from parent to children to grandchildren, from generation to generation; and

WHEREAS, The recognition of the natural and inalienable rights and responsibilities between a man and a woman in marriage and between parents and their children, by birth and adoption, has been so basic and fundamental to American law and government that at the time of the drafting of our state and federal constitutions the protection of these invaluable foundations of society was presumed rather than expressly delineated in the law;

Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, the Assembly thereof concurring, that the Legislature of the State of California at its 1993-94 Regular Session commencing on the seventh day of December 1992, two-thirds of the members elected to each of the two houses of the Legislature voting therefore, hereby proposes to the people of the State of California that the Constitution of the State be amended as follows:

First — That Section I of Article I thereof, is amended to read:

SECTION 1: All people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights. Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing and protecting property, preserving the integrity of one's family, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy.

Second — That Section 31 is added to Article I thereof, to read:

SECTION 31:

(a) This section shall be known and may be cited as the "Family Bill of Rights."

(b) A family is a natural and legal relationship entitled to the highest constitutional recognition and protections.

(c) This section is self-executing and applies to all governmental activities, laws, regulations, and legal proceedings of every kind, including but not limited to, educational, administrative, regulatory, civil, criminal, and juvenile proceedings.

(d) "Family" for the purpose of this article means (1) a man and woman related by marriage, or (2) a parent and his or her children, natural and adopted.

Rand Martin, of the office of Assemblymember Terry Friedman (D-Los Angeles), told the B.A.R. he's "keeping an eye" on the measure but as yet doesn't expect it "to get very far." ▼

Bill Introduced to Combat California Hate Crimes

United Press International

SACRAMENTO — Democrats unveiled legislation March 22 that would finance a year-long study to identify where hate crimes are taking place in California and which groups are most often the target of hate attacks.

The bill, SB559 by state Senator Dianne Watson, D-Los Angeles, would establish uniform procedures for the state Department of Justice to collect data on hate crimes.

Watson told reporters at a Capitol news conference that the bombing of the World Trade Center in New York has spawned a new wave of hate crimes against Muslims. She said hate-based attacks on other groups in California are also on the rise.

Lieutenant Governor Leo McCarthy said the $264,000

State Senator Diane Watson

study is needed to plan an effective response to hate crimes.

Similar legislation by Watson fell victim to budget constraints last year and died in the Legislature.

Her new bill is supported by Byron Green, a black police officer whose Rocklin home was defaced with swastikas, racial slurs, and obscene epithets in January.

Assemblywoman Barbara Lee, D-Oakland, presented legislation that would require the state Board of Education to adopt policies to prevent and respond to hate violence. Her bill, AB1299, would revise state curriculum guidelines in an attempt to teach students the meaning of equality and human dignity. Students who participate in hate crimes could be suspended or expelled.

Governor Pete Wilson vetoed similar legislation by Lee for the past two years on the grounds that the program duplicates existing efforts and was too expensive. ▼

How Local AIDS Organizations Prepare for State Budget Woes

by Jeff Fast

As California's financial crisis worsens, several Bay Area AIDS service providers are preparing emergency plans in the event of a funding suspension from the state, counties, and cities.

To offset anticipated AIDS budget cuts, some organizations are saving large amounts of money, others are planning on playing political hardball to protect their grants, and some intend to fundraise more aggressively.

California State Treasurer Kathleen Brown announced last week that the state will probably run out of money during mid-May, at least six weeks before the fiscal year ends June 30. In this event, the state could be forced to immediately suspend all grants unless California banks will accept state-issued IOUs. Several banks have announced they will not accept any more IOUs unless forced to do so by court order.

The state directly distributes approximately $4 million in AIDS grants to the 11-county Bay Area, more than $1 million of which goes to San Francisco. In addition, it gives $5 million more to Bay Area counties to distribute as they choose. A suspension in state funds could cause some county and city health departments to also run out of money.

Several organizations are preparing for the worst. For example, in 1992, the San Francisco AIDS Foundation invested more than $1 million in treasury bills and interest-bearing savings accounts. San Francisco AIDS Foundation Executive Director Patricia Christen said in a Bay Area Reporter interview that the decision to start saving was solely due to California's gloomy financial situation. SFAF's budget last year was $5.6 million and received $1.7 million in government grants.

"We have enough money in reserve that we can sustain our current operations for three months if all the money dries up, which isn't that long if you think about it," Christen said. "We were concerned about the state's financial situation last year, and it looks like we need to be even more so this year."

Wayne Sauseda, director of the California Office of AIDS in Sacramento, told the B.A.R. that while organizations like SFAF should be concerned, organizations with budgets of less than $500,000 will likely be hit hardest.

"It's a critical situation," Sauseda said. "We're endangering a lot of organizations that don't have a lot of cash to provide HIV services."

Sauseda also said he predicts some counties will run out of AIDS service money and others won't.

"We're keeping our fingers crossed that a budget will be approved on time," he said. "A state funded health care agency should never be expected to operate on a contingency plan."

Other organizations that say they are squirreling money away include Project Open Hand, which now has a cash reserve of more than $650,000 — nearly 11 percent of its $6 million annual budget — and the Stop AIDS Project.

For transition's sake

The South Bay's largest AIDS service provider is Santa Clara County's ARIS project in San Jose, with a $1,000,000 budget, 15 employees, and $35,000 in cash reserves. Although Santa Clara County has California's fastest rising incidence of AIDS, the county commission in January proposed to cut $170,000 — 17 percent — from the ARIS Project budget.

ARIS Project went on the offensive. It organized a campaign to bring pressure on the county commission. They were aided by the San Jose Mercury News, which wrote editorials attacking the funding cut. As of this writing, the Santa Clara County Commission is proposing a $69,000 funding cut instead of $170,000.

ARIS Project spokesman Tom Myers told the B.A.R. his organization would use the same tactics to avoid a further budget hatchet.

"It poses a real dilemma if state funds dry up at the same time county funds are drying up," said Myers. "We'll have to network out to the community and we can use political tactics and just keep blasting away."

Organizations that don't receive state, county or city funds could also have problems because of California's budget crisis, said AIDS Emergency Fund President Rick Salinas. AEF has a $1 million budget, of which $350,000 comes from the fed-

Shanti Embroiled in (Another) Lawsuit

by Dennis Conkin

On the heels of a city audit that found serious problems in its management of $2.7 million in city contracts, an eviction lawsuit brought by Shanti Project, the city's second largest AIDS service organization, against a client with HIV disease who lives in a Shanti residence has been quietly settled out of court.

The terms of the proposed settlement will allow housing client Randall Kramer to rent an apartment "that allows him flexibility in finding alternative housing," said attorney Marc Janowitz, who is representing Kramer on behalf of the AIDS Legal Referral Panel.

"We were certainly ready to go to trial," Janowitz told the Bay Area Reporter.

Janowitz charged that Shanti's attempt to evict Kramer from the program as a nuisance was "retaliation" for complaining about living conditions in the house, whose location is being withheld to protect resident's anonymity.

Kramer was served with a three-day eviction notice last November 15 that said he had "continued to abuse alcohol and other drugs" and that his "intoxicated behavior had substantially interfered with the comfort, safety and enjoyment of other occupants in this premises," according to the three-day notice to quit filed by attorney Michael Hall on behalf of Shanti.

The notice also charged that other occupants of the residence house had been forced to move because of Kramer's actions.

Janowitz said that Kramer had repeatedly complained that a back porch door that led to a utility area was broken and repaired with cracked plexiglass that would have allowed anyone to easily break into the area and possibly get into the apartment. He also complained about missing lightbulbs from the rear stairs to the residence, and about other security and safety matters.

Shanti's Director of Housing, Rick Ruvalo, told the B.A.R. that Kramer was not evicted in retaliation for complaining about the "minor code violations" in the housing but because he had previously attacked two other Shanti residents.

"It was this behavior that that was the basis of the decision for eviction," Ruvalo said.

The housing rented by Shanti from a local home owner was judged to be "sub-standard housing" by the Bureau of Building Inspection of the San Francisco Department of Public Works last July.

A notice of violation was posted on October 1.

Kramer was concerned about safety in the house because of crime in the area, including incidents where the victim of a homicide "had bled to death from stab wounds" and because of a robbery on "the front steps" of the Shanti residence, Janowitz said.

Kramer had complained for eight months about the living conditions prior to the eviction and he "had been sober for months" prior to the service of the eviction notice, according to Janowitz.

According to Ruvalo, the code violations at the site were never brought to the attention of Shanti by the landlord of the building, and as soon as he became aware of them, he contacted the owner and they are being repaired.

There were no ulterior motives, Ruvalo said, the eviction was based on concern for the safety of other residents and Kramer's settlement "was made with a good deal of compassion and concern about his future." ▼

PWA Attacked at SFGH

by Dennis Conkin

A person with AIDS was allegedly assaulted by a janitor in a bizarre attack at San Francisco General Hospital's Ward 5-A on March 19.

Walter Nascimento was attacked at about 3:45 a.m. as he stood waiting for an elevator to take him to the 2nd floor area where patient smoking is permitted.

"It was early in the morning but I couldn't sleep anymore and I went to the elevator to go downstairs and have a cigarette," Nascimento told the Bay Area Reporter.

"He attacked me almost immediately. [Nascimento] asked me where I was going and then he told me that I wasn't going to smoke and he grabbed my arm and twisted it behind my back. My IV pole was flying back and forth from one side to another," Nascimento said.

The porter then, according to Nascimento, threw him inside the elevator.

"If I hadn't had enough sense to push the close button, I think I would have been killed. I was really frightened," Nascimento said. "He was coming toward me."

Nascimento said he had no explanation for the attack.

"When he asked me where I was going I had a feeling that he might have thought I was lost. I said I was going to go smoke a cigarette. That's when everything started. He saw my IV pole, he saw me in the hospital clothes. He knew I was a patient."

Nascimento was in the hospital to have a Grosjean catheter installed in his left shoulder, after problems with a similar shunt in his right shoulder forced its removal. The catheter is used to deliver liquid nutrition and medication to the body.

According to Nascimento, about a half hour after he reported the attack to unit nursing staff "a lot of police officers" arrived at his bedside, and the porter was identified.

Nascimento is pressing charges in the incident.

The incident is under investigation by hospital administrative personnel, a spokesperson for San Francisco General told the Bay Area Reporter. ▼

Bad News...

The homophobes are at it again. Still. Whatever.

This week, Jerry Falwell and his weedy airheads have stepped up their attacks on us, by making Roberta Achtenberg the object of their hatred. They have sent forth letters of typical bile and lies to the so-called "faithful," saying that Clinton has gone "too far" by believing an open lesbian can be qualified to hold office.

Falwell is uncomfortable, in fact, with the notion of anyone holding office whom he does not already hold hostage in some way. If any politician has the guts to stand up to christian terrorism, if any statesman — er, statesperson — has the intelligence to realize an injury to one is an injury to all, if any official has enough memory to recall that this is a country founded on freedom of religion — which also means freedom from religion, for those of us who like it that way — Falwell and his gang have to do what they can to create havoc, discord, and obfuscation.

They know, as we do, that when enough people with sense and courage assume positions of power in America, the role of hatemongers who use Bibles as weapons will be significantly reduced: they will be relegated, again, to their rightful place of irrelevance, spewing out parroted phrases they only vaguely comprehend, somewhat like fifth-rate opera singers who have learned their foreign-language lines phonetically.

In fact, Falwell has many characteristics of fifth-rate opera singers: he is overblown, unintentionally funny, but a sad excuse for real entertainment. Of course, "entertaining" is not what he would like to be. He wants to be — without having to work for it or meet the requirements — a leader. The Germans, by the way, have a word for leader.

It's "fuhrer."

Speaking of leaders, we note with complete dismay that Clinton has started back-pedaling on his promises. Now he talks about segregating the armed forces: gay here, straight there. As someone who bragged during his campaign about his efforts at desegregating the South, he should know better than to believe any kind of segregation is a real solution.

Call him and tell him so: the White House can be reached at (202) 456-1111.

...And Good News:

Last weekend we attended the Cable Car Awards, the 19th annual event where the lesbian and gay community recognizes its own. We happily report the B.A.R. was honored with all three journalism awards, but that's not why we mention it — well, not much, anyway. ...

What we liked best was attending with a friend and his mother, a Pacific Northwest-area housewife now in her 70s (but, as people are wont to say in "Dear Abby," she looks much younger). We had only met her earlier that day, and wondered what she would think of the Cable Cars: she is, after all, a devout Catholic and what is often called "middle American." It turned out she loved it.

Over the course of the evening she watched as people unashamedly referred to themselves as lesbian and gay, unselfconsciously spoke of the lesbian and gay community, and in a few cases proudly thanked their lovers. It took very little time for her to be enveloped in the spirit of the evening, to join in a standing ovation of Kieth Meinhold, and to realize that we are not at all the way we are portrayed by some of the rednecks in her town.

As we left the show, we knew the world had been changed in some small way that evening. Maybe not the whole world, in the way the eradication of HIV would be, but in one tiny but very significant way for this lovely lady from Seattle.

Now, when Jerry Falwell sends her a letter, she will not respond. Or maybe she will, to tell him he is wrong about Roberta Achtenberg and the rest of the lesbian and gay community. And that change was accomplished without arguing amongst ourselves about what we call ourselves or what we wear. It was done simply by people in the community openly loving each other, something we probably do far too infrequently.

Love is, in fact, an enormous force. Jerry Falwell would do well to learn that, but he's probably too poisoned by hate by now to ever get it. His loss. Our gain. ▼

Marching Together — To a Different Drumbeat

by Herb King

One of our past weaknesses in our struggle for our equal rights and treatment has been our lack of visibility. Our adversaries hear our claim that countless thousands of gays and lesbians have served and continue to serve well and honorably in our country's armed forces. Few arguments for lifting the official ban against us can be more effective than a huge turnout — hopefully, thousands — of veterans and service members marching behind the GLBVA (Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Veterans of America) banner in the upcoming March on Washington (MOW) on April 25.

How can our opponents continue to claim that our presence can have a negative and harmful effect on the military forces when they see that we've always been a significant presence in the services and there's not a shred of evidence that our presence has been harmful? Let's dispel these groundless fears!

In October 1987, half a million gay men and lesbians gathered in Washington, but we were all but ignored by the news media and officialdom. Those of us who grew up thinking that we were "the only ones" were given a huge boost in our pride and self-esteem when we saw all those thousands of admirable, respectable gay men and lesbians.

Now that, under President Clinton, the issue of gays in the military has become a front page and television news top story, the media will be out in full force to report and record the April MOW. They will be looking for highlights for their stories. A huge turnout of veterans and servicemembers would be the top story and it can have a great impact on the attitude of our legislators and the general public.

Of the expected million or so of gays and lesbians who will be in Washington for the MOW, tens of thousands will have served or still be serving in the military forces. Some will come intending to be spectators, and some will come planning to march with special groups, but this will be a once-in-history opportunity to present a decisive argument for the removal of the Department of Defense ban on our military service. In the strongest way possible, I urge all veterans and (with discretion) service members to march together behind the GLBVA banner, wearing uniform parts, service ribbons, and other military identifications, such as VFW or DAV hats, for example.

Furthermore, I urge groups such as city or state contingents to immediately follow the GLBVA contingent, carrying signs supporting President Clinton's plan to remove the military ban.

We must win this battle, and we can do it if we are determined and united in our efforts.

P.S. I'm seeking gay veterans of World War I: if you know of any, please contact me:

A Message from Shanti

Shanti Project's Board of Directors is committed to full public accountability for all our funding and is happy to report that we have upgraded the size and professionalism of our fiscal staff, purchased a new file server and computers and purchased new and appropriate software. Over 500 staff hours have been applied to the upgrading of our systems and we believe that we now have the ability to provide full fund accounting for each of our eight governmental contracts. We have confidence that the $1.7 million in housing contracts for Fiscal Year 1992-93 are now in full compliance with city accounting requirements. We are also pleased that, of the 11 evaluative indicators in the city's current monitoring report on our housing program, only two categories are not rated "satisfactory." We believe this stands as a strong indication that the quantity and quality of our housing services currently provided are substantive and significant.

We recognize that in FY 1991-92, our accounting systems did not individually track each of our five housing contracts which totaled $965,000 and that we did not use proper invoicing procedures. Over the next two months, we will work with the city's AIDS office to manually reconstruct the expenses for each of these contracts and reconcile our spending. Specific charges addressed at Shanti Project have questioned whether or not the agency has billed for certain services that were not delivered. Previously, our accounting systems were inadequate to itemize actual expenses line by line and we mistakenly billed instead for estimated expenses, based monthly on 1/12th of the total contract. We believe that our reconciliation will demonstrate that all public monies have been spent on worthy services to people with HIV/AIDS and that once this process is completed, we will have addressed all concerns about last year's contracts.

We want to assure the agency's 2,000 clients, 1,200 volunteers and thousands of donors that we acknowledge our past accounting and invoicing errors. We also want to assure you that we have taken aggressive steps to correct the problems. We are confident that this will not change our primary mission: providing quality services and housing to people with HIV/AIDS. The housing which Shanti Project offers is affordable, accessible and of high quality and we are proud to continue to provide people in our city with this desperately-needed service.

Long Live The "Dish"

It is indeed amazing how people can write letters to your paper without investigating anything and then accuse your writers of not getting the facts either. I am further chagrined that you would even publish the diatribe written (I wonder) by Lee Fredericks, B.A.R., March 11 letters.

I definitely recall clearly Mr. Marcus asking his readers if they wanted more news or more "dish" (gossip) in his column about 2 years ago. I was a respondent in that polling and if my memory serves me right, the overwhelming response was — more dish.

It is obvious that Lee Fredericks was not around a couple of years ago, otherwise he wouldn't have headlined his irresponsible and uninformed letter "Marcus: Gossip or News?" Or was that written by you, Mr. Editor?

I appreciate all the work that goes into writing a weekly column about leather — not only the scene here but in other cities and countries; let's face it, a little dish is why we all read Liz Smith, Rex Reed, Herb Caen and yes — Mr. Marcus.

While I have heard nothing really positive surrounding Gregory Adams and any and all his endeavors — except from Gregory Adams himself — I refrain from "dishing" the whole affair. Mr. Frederick is new in town. He'll learn about ego-tripping, self-promoting people in our community soon enough.

In the meantime, he should refrain from lauding people who really do not deserve lauding. Had Lee Fredericks lived here a year or two earlier, he would not be defending people with whom he's only had minimum dealings; on the other hand, maybe he's a true believer. Yeah. So are the people holed up in that compound in Waco, Texas.

Needs Help for a Big Battle

I am a gay man past the legal draft age who never registered for the draft because of the government's prohibition of military personnel who shared my sexual orientation. When I turned 18, then-President Reagan had declared gay men and lesbians unfit for military life. Knowing this, there was no need for me to register for a possible draft. Why should the government want openly gay men to register for the draft, only have to throw them out? Why not? I should have asked.

That brings me to my current problem: I have been denied federal student aid benefits because I never registered for the draft and am told that I can never receive student aid as a result.

I am launching a fight against the Departments of Education and Defense and the Selective Service System — fighting against this hypocritical bigotry.

I am looking for any experience or suggestions your readers may have regarding this issue. Please address any input to me at 2261 Market St., No. 188, San Francisco, CA 94114-1693.

Who Really Represents Us?

During the course of the recent foolishness at City Hall, it has become increasingly clear to me that no one is in charge at City Hall. This goes for the Office of the Mayor as well as the Board of Supervisors. The election of this mayor was a mistake and has become an embarrassment to the citizens of San Francisco. At a time when leadership is essential, we are subjected to the bumbling of Mr. Jordan.

Simultaneously, I wonder who is really represented by the Board of Supervisors. It doesn't seem to be San Francisco's neighborhoods and its residents. I find it hard to believe that if we had district elections for supervisors that this current state of affairs in city government would exist. Right now, if a citizen wishes to make his or her voice known, they would have to contact all of the supervisors. There is no accountability.

We need supervisors who are accountable to the city's neighborhoods and who will be held accountable for solving the problems of the city — by neighborhood and in its entirety. District elections for the Board of Supervisors would also provide us with a more accurate legislative representation of San Francisco's diversity. To echo the theme of the November 1992 national election — "It Is Time For A Change," because what we have now is not working.

The Year of Living Dangerously

To the Pride/Freedom Day Parade officials, let me add my vote to those hoping we can find a more inclusive theme this year, rather than use that day to haggle over the "Q" word.

When "Year of the Queer" popped up for a theme, we read it was anything from "poetic" to "controversial" to "unacceptable" — Carole Migden said it might not fly with older, more conservative types. Since Pride Day is a good time to remember what we owe our older generation, you might take into account how offensive the word still is for many of them and opt for a less exclusionary theme.

At this point, I'm beginning to care less anyway since it appears there is no appeal; the issue that saddens me is that it's becoming such a problem for many that talk of boycotting the parade/festivities is becoming more common and people sound less inclined to affirm the spirit and fun of the day — more inclined to argue politics and "what's in a label."

Personally, I'd rather be called "fag" or "homo" than "queer" (the adjective's O.K.). But to be politically correct, 1993 can't be "The Year of the Queer" anyway since Randy Shilts already declared that 1990 was (See The Advocate, Jan. 1, 1991). If you're into copying used themes, why don't you call it "The Year of Living Dangerously?"

Aware of Diversity

Just a brief note to point out that I am very glad to see the column about the Asian-American International Film Showcase written by Jim Coughenour. The B.A.R. is aware of the diversity out there in the gay/lesbian world and I, for one, depend on your paper to find out what's happening. Thanks.

I would like to point out that Nidhi Singh is mentioned in that March 4 column on page 31. I saw this filmmaker last year at the screening of "Khush Refugees" and I'm quite sure this person is a woman. The use of "he"/"his" in your column seems to indicate otherwise. Oops!

Foundation

million, was spent for services, according to the agency's own tax records for the 1991-92 fiscal year. That figure includes the $1.8 million in government funds specifically set aside for services; by law, those grants may not be used for administrative purposes. SFAF uses 65 percent of the money raised from the private sector for its administrative budget, so just 35 percent of the money directly donated by the public—$1.3 million—actually goes to services such as the hotline or the housing program.

SFAF spent $288,000 on the housing program last year, putting clients up in a total of twenty participating motels. Surprisingly, the B.A.R. has learned, none of those motels offer SFAF a discount.

"Understand that many of our clients are difficult to care for," Christen said. "They are the most disenfranchised people, homeless, many are drug users who've had problems with the criminal justice system and have multiple diagnoses."

SFAF refused to let the B.A.R. know which motels participate in the program, so the owners could be asked why volume discounts aren't offered.

Salaries and expenses

Christen now earns a $74,753 salary, after receiving a 16.7 percent raise last year, and she spent an additional $30,000 on travel, mostly to Washington, D.C.

The entire agency had travel expenses for conferences and lobbying of $270,000 last year, or an average of more than $4,000 per employee. Christen defended the travel expenses as necessary for AIDS organizations' continued funding.

"We're trying to network and broaden our coalition," she said. "We have to be seen and heard. This is how we helped the Ryan White Care Act get passed, which brought $20 million to the city."

But four days after the presidential election, Christen and SFAF Public Policy Director Rene Durazzo flew to Washington to join 70 other AIDS organization representatives to "reach consensus on what the President's HIV priorities should be." The list of proposals were all things Clinton had already promised to do during his campaign, such as creating an AIDS czar and lifting the HIV immigration ban.

"If you're not there they ignore you," Durazzo told the B.A.R. "You have to make sure you're always there asking for help."

SFAF has not reported any lobbying or attempts to influence public policy to the IRS.

San Francisco Board of Supervisors member Carole Migden has created a committee to determine how AIDS service organizations could save money by having services combined. Some employees of smaller groups have expressed concern that this will lead to their organizations' programs being integrated into larger agencies such as SFAF and the Shanti project.

"These concerns are understandable but baseless," Christen said. "We have no intentions of being all things to all people. The foundation even gave up the popular food bank program after we decided it could be more efficiently administered by Project Open Hand."

*1. Includes Honorariums, Sales of Brochures and Interest on Savings.

*2. Last years top corporate sponsors were Burroughs Wellcome, KKSF 103.7, KGO-TV 7, Bank of America, and A T & T

*3. Includes the Salaries and Fringe Benefits of employees who provide direct services to clients.

Still, SFAF's programs appear to be safe from incorporation into other agencies. Christen is one of 24 members of the Mayor's HIV Health Services Planning Council, which awarded SFAF $830,000 in contracts last year.

Despite the millions it raises annually from the public, SFAF has not shied away from producing controversial images of homosexual sex for educational campaigns; its annual budgets for those projects have ranged from $500,000 to $800,000 during the past three years. Its brochures depicting safer sex caused controversy in several cities during the 1980s. Last year's billboard campaign featuring gay men and the themes "Family Values," and "Right to Life" drew the ire of some conservatives and the U.S. Marine Corps.

SFAF is now a co-sponsor of a safe-sex video contest. Christen said she was unafraid of angering more conservative donors for being involved with what some might call a pornography contest.

"We're proud to serve the gay male community, and in San Francisco that's a very crucial population to reach," she said.

Goodbye marketing, hello Impact AIDS

But not all with SFAF's education department is well and good. During the first four months of Christen's tenure, the six-member marketing department, which sold brochures to health agencies across the country, was dissolved. All six former employees formed a for-profit company, called Impact AIDS, which in turn was given the contracts to continue selling SFAF's educational brochures on a commission basis. During the first year of this arrangement, proceeds from the sales plunged $525,000, or 76 percent.

Christen defended the decision to disband the department and have the sales go to a private company.

"We were carrying the department and there was no point in keeping it. It wasn't necessary," she said. "Impact AIDS is doing a fine job marketing the materials."

But according to tax records, selling the brochures was in fact profitable. In 1989-90, for example, the sales paid for $690,000 of a $780,000 education budget. Last year the sales paid for $140,000 of a $560,000 education budget. And despite the departure of the marketing employees, the payroll was still increasing during what Christen and Durazzo called a period of budget deficits.

More than $1 million of SFAF's budget was invested in a portfolio of mutual funds and treasury bills last year. Accounting Director Robert Baldock explained that because of city and state deficits, SFAF wants to have three months worth of operating reserves in case government funds are cut off.

During the same period when SFAF developed its new educational campaign, titled "Be Here For the Cure," it was digging in for the long haul, making million-dollar investments and developing a pension plan.

"I truly hope that we all are here for the cure," Christen said. "But the fact is that we have to prepare for the worst." ▼

Supreme Courtship

With the announcement last week of the impending retirement of Supreme Court Justice Byron White, appointed to the high court 31 years ago by President John Kennedy, and the expected announcement later this year that a second Justice, Harry Blackmun, will also step down, President Bill Clinton has a rare chance to alter the Supreme Court in his first year in office. While it was only a year ago that liberals were writing off the Supreme Court as a lost cause for the protection of civil rights and civil liberties, many now see the Clinton appointment(s) as a real change in the court's direction. In fact, to the degree that Justice White represented disdain for important rights and liberties — particularly when voting on issues such as abortion and gay rights — the Clinton appointment to replace him definitely signals less danger for those freedoms.

The hottest guessing game in Washington this week is who the president will appoint to White's seat, and special interest groups of every type were busy promoting their candidates for the life-long job. While campaigning for the presidency last year, candidate Clinton promised that anyone he names to the high court must believe in a constitutional right to privacy that permits a woman to legally obtain an abortion, and the president's public comments these past few days seemed only to reinforce that feeling. Candidate Clinton also promised that he would make the federal judiciary "look more like America," and that statement opened the floodgates this week from every possible group to call for one of their own. Harriet Woods, head of the National Women's Political Caucus, immediately started pushing for a woman to get the White seat, noting that only one woman now sits on the court and "common sense would say the ultimate court of appeals in this country should be more reflective of the population."

New York Congressman Jose Serrano, chair of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, urged Clinton to "make history with the nomination of the first Hispanic-American to the U. S. Supreme Court," and the White House continued this week being swamped with appointment lobbying. Who will President Clinton's first pick on the high court be? As we went to press most of the talk centered around five candidates: New York Governor Mario Cuomo, whom Clinton mentioned by name only last year as having the "temperament, intellect, judgment, and training" for the high court; Cuomo, a Catholic, believes in a woman's right to choice on the abortion issue, is considered a friend of gays, and would be a "liberal" — presumably — on the Court; Cuomo is 60 years old, is serving his third term as N.Y. governor, and is a graduate of St. John's College and St. John's University School of Law.

At the moment, most Washington observers rate Cuomo at the top of Clinton's list. Others said to be seriously considered are:

• Marian Wright Edelman, founder of the Children's Defense Fund; she is 53 years old, is from Bennettsville, South Carolina; graduated from Spellman College and Yale University Law School; and is a personal friend of the Clintons.

• Amalva D. Kearse, a U.S. Appeals Court judge in New York, is also said to be on the "short list"; she is black, 55 years old, a graduate of Wellesley College and the recipient of a law degree from the University of Michigan.

• Richard Arnold is 56, a federal appellate judge in Washington, Texas-born, and a graduate of Yale University and Harvard Law School. Arnold was a law clerk to Justice William Brennan Jr. in the '60s and he, too, is a personal friend of both the President and Hillary Clinton.

• Drew S. Days III is a 51-year-old Yale University Law professor, born in Georgia, a graduate of Hamilton College and Yale University Law School, and a former assistant attorney general for civil rights during the Carter presidency.

Other names being mentioned include Harvard legal scholar Laurence Tribe and federal judges Jose Cabranes of New Haven, Connecticut, Stephen Breyer of Boston, and Stephanie Seymour of the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in New York. The two other names that surfaced this week were those of Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine, who was reportedly leaking the word around Washington that he wanted the appointment, and New York Court of Appeals Chief Judge Judith Kaye.

Whoever President Clinton appoints will have to agree with the new president on, above all, the abortion issue, so Roe v. Wade, which Justice White tried in vain to repeal, seems safe once again. Although pressure from women's groups to appoint a woman are mounting, the early betting in the nation's capital is that Clinton will probably choose a man (if I had to bet, I'd probably bet on Cuomo) to his first appointment; with the second, and possibly a third (Chief Justice Rehnquist has also said he doesn't want to remain on the high court forever) going to women in an attempt to give the court a balance that Clinton is known to feel is long overdue. Would Mario Cuomo accept a nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court? In a New York minute, he would.

Politics and People

Homophobia is still alive and well in the GOP — at a Virginia Republican dinner last week Iran-Contra figure Oliver North, a former Marine colonel, not only made a homophobic joke, but defended it later by explaining that "I did try to stick a burr in the saddle of the Clinton administration, and I hope they're offended; it was aimed specifically at the Clinton White House." North, expected to be the GOP nominee for the U. S. Senate next year from Virginia, says Clinton's plan to allow gays in the military is "a terrible idea," and told those at the GOP dinner that he had tried recently to telephone President Clinton but the White House switchboard wouldn't let him through until he disguised his voice with a lisp. Other GOP speakers at the dinner referred to the Clinton military plan as proposing "fags in the foxhole," warned the military to "watch your rear flank," and made racist jokes as well. Surprised? You shouldn't be; this is the same party of racist homophobes that held that Houston convention last year that led to the defeat of George Bush.

Apparently the Republicans still don't get it.

Meanwhile, California Republicans tell me that former peninsula congressman, Tom Campbell, defeated in last year's U.S. Senate primary, will run for state treasurer next year.

There aren't a hell of a lot of Examiner writers I care for, but AIDS reporter Lisa Krieger's "open letter to the community" in Sunday's Ex was, in my opinion, a masterpiece; thanks for writing it Ms. Krieger, you're one of the best.

Mayor Jordan gets points for his stance on the needle exchange program, and the mayor could use some good ink for a change.

Massachusetts State Education Commissioner Robert Antonucci announced that he will ask the state board of education next month to urge school districts to teach gay issues; this was prompted by a report by a state committee on gay and lesbian youth, appointed by Governor Bill Weld — a Republican, described as the most pro-gay governor in the nation.

You gotta love Liz — Elizabeth Taylor, appearing at a Macy's press conference in Chicago last week to announce her latest AIDS project, an August 1 Cirque du Soleil benefit in that city, was serving Coca-Cola and popcorn to the dozens of children who ended up asking the world's most famous AIDS activist about safe sex, how her organization operates, etc. Taylor says the best moment came when one child asked the star aloud if Macy's was going to contribute any money to Taylor's new AIDS foundation. Taylor laughed raucously and said, "Great question, kid, I was just about to hit them up myself."

...And Then There Was Nunn...

by Nancy Boutillier

First there was a candidate's pledge. Then the candidate became the President and promised to make good on that pledge. Next, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff mounted opposition to the prospect of an Executive Order.

Then, zillions of phone calls from the religious right flooded the nation's capital, taking aim at the only target politicians still allow.

And then there was Nunn. Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, that is. Chair of the

Commentary

Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator Nunn will be presiding over the hearings on lifting the ban on lesbians and gay men in the military, scheduled to begin as early as March 29.

"Now, before Senator Nunn begins his hearings, is the time to make this issue visible in the broader community," said Melinda Cuthbert of Operation Lift The Ban and the Human Rights Campaign Fund (HRCF).

As member of HRCF's national Board of Governors, Cuthbert is currently on a mission of lesbian outreach in San Francisco for HRCF.

According to Cuthbert, the time is right — and the ban is the first step in a long agenda for HRCF — for a grassroots campaign to make a difference in national policy. Now is the time to contact politicians — particularly the members of Nunn's Senate committee — with phone calls and letters, to urge friends to contact their representatives, and to talk about the hearings. "We must build a sentiment and create a public atmosphere that says the ban is unacceptable treatment of American citizens," said Cuthbert in a recent interview.

Just as women's voices creating a context for understanding Anita Hill's testimony during the Confirmation Hearings on Clarence Thomas, it will be the voices of lesbians and gay men that create a context for the upcoming hearings.

Cuthbert sees conversations among families, neighbors, colleagues, and friends as an important political act. "We have to talk about this issue with friends at work because the gay response will be important to how the hearings will be interpreted by the average American," said Cuthbert.

While conceding that "all the talking did not stop Thomas's appointment," Cuthbert maintained that the hearings and the heightened public awareness did influence the following election.

With so much public debate falling into the homophobic gutter about showers — and here the focus is clearly on gay men and the fears of straight men — groups like Lift The Ban continue to point out that Department of Defense statistics confirm that women are three times more likely than men to be discharged from military service for homosexuality.

With numbers like that, it seems appropriate that lesbians should be on the front lines fighting to lift the ban. And they should be encouraging straight women to think about this issue in terms of sexual harassment. Do you think straight servicewomen are more familiar with sexual harassment by straight men or by lesbians?

I think in this case the loose lips of women will help to sink the tight ship of homophobia that is floating along as SOP (Standard Operating Procedure) in the Armed Services.

Furthermore, according to Cuthbert, an end to the ban is an important stepping stone to other items on HRCF's civil rights. "Failure to lift the military ban will, to politicians, justify non-support for gay and lesbian civil rights," said Cuthbert.

How will politicians from Altoona, Pennsylvania to Denver, Colorado ever feel compelled to sponsor or support a national Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights Bill if their colleagues and constituencies oppose the military ban?

"If we allow the government to prevent gay men and lesbians from participating fully in the military," said Cuthbert, "then we open the door for the government to prevent us from participating in other areas of American life."

Cuthbert's ambition is to have lesbians participating fully in the political process — circulating petitions, collecting signatures, phone banking, writing letters, and running for public office.

She is also working to get more lesbians involved with HRCF at every level, and hopes to make the serious work of political organizing fun. To that end, HRCF is sponsoring a "Rosie The Riveter Uniform Party" — a dollar off at the door for women in uniform — at The G-Spot on March 27 to support Operation Lift the Ban. "It's more about raising awareness than raising money," Cuthbert said, adding, "And it should be a terrific party. There will be a short presentation with an introduction by Supervisor Carole Migden and testimonials by women who have been in the military."

Over the past decade, HRCF has established itself as a viable organizing and fundraising force in gay and lesbian politics. With more than 67,000 members nationwide, it's the largest national gay and lesbian political action committee.

HRCF has quietly and effectively used the system for change. No outing, no kiss-ins, no cross-dressing, no "in-your-face" tactics. Unlike ACT UP and Queer Nation, the name does not spark terror in the mind of middle America. Their logo is an American flag with a pink triangle replacing one of the stars.

Among lesbians I know, HRCF has had suit-and-tie image. It is queer politics at its most "presentable," perhaps even its least queer. I've heard some call what HRCF does "assimilation politics." With a legislative and electoral focus, thirty-five staffers of HRCF have positioned themselves not as outsiders trying to get in, but as people who are already inside trying to be recognized for who they are and trying to effect a change in both statute and status.

But change was the buzz word of the Presidential campaign. The candidate-turned-President seems anxious to keep his word, and HRCF has turned its attention to a grassroots effort.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff continues to resist and the phone calls from the religious right are outnumbering those who want to lift the ban.

And then there is Nunn. Senator Sam Nunn. If you want to lift the ban, lift your phone and dial Sen. Nunn at (202) 224-3521.

And if you want to raise your voice, here are the numbers of some people who need to hear from you: Senate Switchboard (202) 224-3121; House Switchboard (202) 225-3121; Colin Powell (703) 697-9121; President Clinton (202) 456-1111; Operation Lift The Ban (415) 306-0477. ▼

A Visit with the Big Spin Doctor

by Michael C. Botkin

The gay and lesbian lobbyists (one gay, one lesbian, of course) walked timidly into the White House, acutely aware of the cool response elicited by their presence. Clinton staff gate-keepers, after a quick covert glance at the organizational name proclaimed on their security tags, passed them through with a lack of enthusiasm that bordered on reluctance. But their appointment was, in fact, in order and they were swiftly routed through to the office of the Big Spin Doctor.

Back in their glory days — was it only a few months ago? — these same lobbyists had been welcomed like saviors. The Clinton campaign was on the ropes and they were hailed as timely heroes, with a united constituency (well, as united as it ever got) lining up to write big checks for the faltering candidate. Many promises had been made in those days.

And while none of these big promises had actually been broken, none of them had exactly been kept, either. They were owed something, these now-humble lobbyists, and they needed it soon if they were to make it through the next few months without disaster, lamentation, and endless charges of Political Incorrectness (irritating but survivable) and incompetence (the Kiss of Death). Thus this long-delayed meeting with the Big Spin Doctor.

One might have assumed that the BSD was particularly sympathetic to their cause, given his previous career (before he masterminded the victorious Presidential campaign) as a professional ballet dancer. Oddly, the implicit link seemed to have the opposite effect, and their relations with this crucial operative had always been slightly chilly. Until now they'd been able to work comfortably through other channels. Now they were desperate enough to go, figuratively speaking hats in hand, to seek an audience and a favor.

Even the Irish

They were greeted at his office by the BSD himself. "David, Judy; good to see you. Have a seat," he said with a fair degree of cordiality. Despite his proclaimed joy at their presence, however, they couldn't help but notice how he shot a quick glance up and down the corridor before he swiftly — but silently — snapped the door shut. He sat behind his large desk and, after a brief but visible struggle, said: "What can I do for you?"

Judy, as junior officer, launched right into the pitch without preliminaries. "We've had a hellish couple of months. Bashing is up. The Pentagon has launched a new witch-hunt. New York City fired their school chancellor rather than let him institute a gay-positive curriculum. We even got kicked out of the St. Patrick's day parade!" she wailed. Unspoken was the general agreement that you've sunk pretty low when even the Irish can look down on you.

"Well, that's all too bad, I agree. But we can't tell the Ancient Order of the Hibernians who to admit to their parades; we can't dictate to the school board of New York City, either," the BSD said. He decided not to press this particular point in regard to the Pentagon. "What would you have us do?"

David, as ranking representative of his constituency on the spot, made the formal demand. "We need for Bill Clinton to address the big Gay Rights march here in D.C. next month," he stated simply.

After a pregnant silence, BSD slowly shook his head. "Sorry. Can't be done," he said.

"It has to be done!" David insisted. "Bill promised to lift the military ban; he postponed it. He said he'd lift the immigration ban; he's rolled over and played dead on it, when he could have vetoed it. He's got to make some clear, visible sign of support to our cause, and soon, or we're dead meat," he concluded.

"If we can't get this budget passed, then we're dead meat!" BSD shot back. "And you'll just be the after-dinner mints for the Helms crowd!" He continued, in a calmer tone: "Such a display wouldn't do your cause any good, it would just put more heat on Bill when he can least afford it. In just a few months — after the budget's passed — there'll be plenty of time to finesse these things through their hearings."

"But we can't afford a big show-down on such a loaded ideological issue while the meat-and-potatoes stuff is still up for grabs," he said decisively.

Castrating bulldagger from Hell

"Well, how about Hillary then?" Judy threw in. "Everybody knows that she's more sympathetic on this particular issue. The Republicans have been afraid to attack her since they got dinged for 'Hillary bashing' during the campaign. She doesn't officially hold any high office, but her presence would show that the First Family supports gay rights."

But BSD was already shaking his head. "It's precisely because everyone knows how sympathetic she is that she can't afford to do it," he answered. "She's working on completely reforming the country's health care system — do you think this sort of thing will help her? The Right considers her a castrating feminist bulldagger from Hell; this would only confirm it for them. Remember that cover of Spy magazine, which spliced her head onto a scantily leather clad dominatrix body? Rumor has it that Marilyn Quayle had it blown up to life-size to use as a dart board. They'd love a new excuse to go after her, and this would be perfect. No. Out of the question. She can't afford it; Bill can't afford it; ultimately, you can't even afford it."

"What about Chelsea, then?" Judy asked desperately. "They can't trash a kid, can they?"

"No, but they can sure trash her parents," BSD said. "How can they send her to the biggest gathering of perverts in the history of the universe?" he asked rhetorically. "Hell, they wouldn't even send her to public school, and you think they'll let her face a crowd of half a million queers — including the North American Man/Boy Love Association and assorted leather types — while the cameras are running? No way." He sighed dramatically, to illustrate his growing impatience with all such impossible demands.

"I've got it!" said David, lighting up with sudden inspiration. "Socks!" Judy's mouth gaped in disbelief, but the BSD sat up in mild interest. Encouraged, David continued.

"Send Socks the cat. He's photogenic; he's associated with the First Family; he won't make a gaffe or spur attacks. We can put a cute rainbow collar on him, and maybe a PAWS (Pets Are Wonderful Support) T-shirt. And lesbians love cats," he said.

"Lesbians love pizza, too, but that doesn't mean we should have one address the March!" Judy protested, shocked. "Since when are pets taken seriously in politics?" she asked.

"Well, Millie the Dog's autobiography out-sold Ronald Reagan's by ten to one margins," BSD said, nodding his head. "I think this can be done. I'll have to run it past a focus group, but I believe we have a viable compromise here."

"We'll need an up to date veterinary report on the First Cat," David mused. "And we'll have to work it so he doesn't share the podium with anyone who's allergic," he continued. "Do you think we'll need to use catnip?" he asked.

"Oh, no," said Judy, in a voice deep with sarcasm. "He's occasionally sniffed catnip, but he's never actually rolled in it."

"Good luck with the March," BSD said jovially, rising to show his guests out. "I think this gesture will show everyone that Bill keeps his promises."

"Let's just hope they don't read too much into how he keeps them," Judy grumbled; but quietly. ▼

Migden Wants Condom Machines in Every Bar

by Dennis Conkin

Supervisor Carole Migden — with the backing of the San Francisco Department of Public Health — will ask the City Attorney's Office to draft legislation that would require all restaurants and bars that serve alcohol to the public to have condoms available for customers to purchase.

"We'd certainly like to make them free, but as an alternative measure, the legislation may require that the establishments have latex condoms available in vending machines," legislative aide Dana Van Gorder told the Bay Area Reporter.

"Several studies have shown that people who use heavy amounts of alcohol are most likely to engage in unsafe sex; therefore the Department of Public Health supports Supervisor Migden's proposal," said Mitchell Katz, M.D., director of the Health Department's AIDS Office. [See related story, "The Role of Alcohol in HIV Transmission," page 18.]

Migden believes there may be some opposition to the measure, but she expects to win the fight for its passage anyway, said Van Gorder.

"I'm sure we'll have the necessary votes on the board," he said.

There may be several members on the Board of Supervisors who believe the measure is necessary, but the same may not be true within the ranks of the San Francisco Restaurant Association. The local lobby group is aware of Migden's plan but has "no statement at this time," a spokesman told the B.A.R., because the matter is being reviewed by the group's public affairs committee.

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce doesn't have a "specific opinion" on Migden's measure but said it preferred to see an education program targeting businesses to understand the need for condom availability, rather than legislation requiring them to be available, a spokesperson told the B.A.R. ▼

Grand Jury Reports TB Risks, No Screenings, in SF County Jails

by Jeff Fast

Tuberculosis is still a problem in San Francisco County jails, and HIV-infected inmates are at risk of being exposed to active tuberculosis, a grand jury reported last week.

Despite a rising occurrence of active TB cases each year since 1985, TB control measures were not even discussed by the San Francisco Sheriff's Department until 1991, the grand jury stated.

The grand jury, in its report, said, "the jails did not have a tuberculosis screening program for inmates, although the guidelines of pertinent national and state agencies call for tuberculosis screening of inmates soon after entry into prison." Furthermore, it reported, there is a possibility of "transmittal ... from infected to uninfected [inmates], particularly those who were immune-compromised by HIV; to personnel of the Sheriff's Department; and to other staff who regularly come in contact with prisoners."

The Sheriff's Department declined to discuss the grand jury report with the Bay Area Reporter.

Thirteen cases of active TB were found among prisoners in 1992, according to Gisela Schechter, director of the San Francisco Department of Public Health's TB Control division. There were 334 total cases of active TB in San Francisco last year.

TB is a special problem for jails because inmates live in close quarters that are often poorly ventilated. Department of Health Spokesperson Wendy Iwata said the chance of catching TB in the jails is increasing, despite efforts to combat the disease.

"The chance of catching TB anywhere has gone up dramatically, in or out of jail," said Iwata.

While the grand jury conceded that TB control measures were recently implemented, and county jails are now somewhat safer, there are still problems. Not all inmates are tested for TB before being allowed into the general prison population, and sometimes prison personnel forget to test inmates who are transferred.

Schechter said there is no way of finding out how many PWAs have contracted TB in the county jails. ▼

Does the SFPD Have a File on You?

by Dennis Conkin

Extensive computerized intelligence files, privately maintained and allegedly sold by a former San Francisco police officer, include information about activists in the lesbian and gay community, the Bay Area Reporter has learned.

The files were maintained by former San Francisco Police Officer Tom Gerard, despite a policy by the San Francisco Police Commission that forbids such intelligence gathering.

That policy, created in negotiation with the American Civil Liberties Union, the San Francisco Bar Association, other attorneys, and police brass, banned the gathering of political intelligence on activist groups except in extreme cases such as possible terrorist activity.

The policy also banned the infiltration of activist groups by undercover police officers. "Those of us who are active in queer and AIDS activist groups have known all along that the San Francisco Police Department was engaging in illegal intelligence-gathering, in violation of our First Amendment constitutional rights," said Gerard Koskovich.

Koskovich recently sought and received records from the Gerard files about him. The file contained two listings: one was a reference to a speech Koskovich gave on October 7, 1989 — one day after the infamous October 6 Castro Street confrontation between police and activists following a peaceful ACT UP march; and the other was a reference to a newspaper article in which Koskovich is mentioned. The file also erroneously notes that Koskovich, a historian, is an attorney.

"The only possible reason for this is what many of us have always known, that the San Francisco Police Department equates legitimate criticism of them as suspected terrorism; there is no other possible explanation unless they wish us to believe that Gerard Koskovich is a spy for foreign terrorists. That's absolutely hysterical," said Koskovich's attorney, Walter Parsley.

The files were discovered earlier this year when the officer's house was subjected to a search warrant after the veteran police officer, reported to have links to the Central Intelligence Agency as well as South African and Israel security forces, abruptly quit his job and fled to the Philippines.

Gerard has not been yet been charged with any crime, despite allegations that he maintained and sold intelligence data to the Anti-Defamation League and other groups.

An investigation into the incident is continuing.

Individuals who believe they may have been a target of the illegal intelligence-gathering may submit a notarized statement of their identity with a self-addressed stamped envelope to the San Francisco Police Department Special Investigations Unit at 850 Bryant Street and the files will be scanned for information concerning them. If data is found, copies will be provided to the individual. ▼

LAVA Flows Warmly For Bay Area Lesbians

by Noreen C. Barnes

Bay Area Career Women sponsored the inaugural LAVA (Lesbians of Achievement, Vision, and Action) awards on Saturday, March 13, with a benefit dinner and dance at the Miyako Hotel. Three local women were honored for their contributions to the community and their enhancement of lesbian visibility outside the community.

Master of Ceremonies Carmen Vazquez called the sold-out dinner dance of 400 an "unprecedented event" in honoring the work of lesbians, and another in a series of significant steps by which lesbian visibility has been increased in the Bay Area. Carole Migden read a commendation to BACW from the Board of Supervisors for producing the awards and increasing lesbian "visibility, empowerment, and pride."

Jean Harris read a proclamation from the Mayor - Jordan's name was greeted with murmurs, hisses, and a few outright boos - declaring March 13 LAVA Award day. BACW President Maureen O'Leary noted that the BACW "A Fund of Our Own" has raised over $100,000 for a variety of lesbian projects, and that it was not only to promote the visibility of lesbians (the theme of the evening) but to also take responsibility for it. Felicia Park-Rogers spoke on behalf of LYRIC (Lavender Youth Recreation and Information Center), a support project of BACW, and cited its importance in helping lesbians from the ages of 12 to 23 develop "a sense of leadership and of self."

Guest speaker at the award ceremony was Margaret Cammermeyer. Cammermeyer, a specialist in neuroscience nursing, was discharged from the army national guard last year - after 26 years of service - for having the courage to acknowledge her homosexuality, and subsequently has filed a suit for reinstatement and to have the ban on gays and lesbians in the military lifted.

Cammermeyer's account of her struggle was both moving and witty. She talked about the difficulty in acknowledging her own homophobia in her coming out process, and spoke of those in the military under investigation for being gay just two years ago, who were still sent overseas to fight during the Persian Gulf War: "it's all right to die for your country if you're gay, but not to serve in peace;" there is something "inherently wrong about the regulation against homosexuality." Cammermeyer's dream had been that of becoming a general, but instead she found herself "separated" from the military in June 1992.

She thought she was alone in her situation, especially as an "old Colonel," but soon found support from both gay and women's legal service organizations. Cammermeyer came out to her father and four sons, and despite the support from them and others, realized "that there's something about coming out when you feel that your presence is an insult to those around you. ... It's only as people understand that we are quite like them that we will be able to bring diversity to society."

Barbara Cameron's award for Community Service recognized her work with the Alice B. Toklas Democratic Club, as a Jackson delegate at the 1988 Democratic convention, as co-chair of the Lesbian/Gay Freedom Day Parade Committee (her efforts helped change the name of the Parade to include lesbians and increase lesbian visibility), her service as the Executive Director of CUAV from 1989 to 1982, and, recently, overcoming health problems to become re-involved with the community in her positions on the San Francisco Commission on the Status of Women and the Board of the American Indian AIDS Institute. She acknowledged those who helped her come out and have inspired and supported her throughout the years, including a wise aunt, Pat Norman, Carmen Vazquez, Roma Guy, Cristos, and her domestic partner of a dozen years. "Lesbian," she noted, "is a sweet and sexy word."

The award for Public Service was presented to Gwen Craig, who graciously acknowledged "what we've accomplished together" in the promotion of lesbian visibility, citing in particular the support of Aché, the collective of lesbians of African descent. Craig called the LAVA award an acknowledgement that in turn inspired her to do more. Her extensive contributions to politics and government include being a representative on the California Democratic Party State Committee, service as a member of the San Francisco Police Commission, as Vice President and President of the Harvey Milk Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club, the National Center for Lesbian Rights, and her current work as co-chair of Lesbians and Gays of African American Descent for Democratic Action (LGADDA).

Adele Prandini, who received the Private Creation award, is the artistic director of Theatre Rhinoceros, the oldest gay and lesbian theatre in the country. She has been with the company as an actor, director, producer, and playwright since 1984, and its artistic director since January 1991. She is the co-author and director of the hit lesbian musical romance, Pulp and Circumstance, and is currently completing another lesbian musical, Coconut, which will open at the Cowell Theatre in June. Prandini directed Wild Blue, Without a Net, and See Rock City, and has worked with Brava! For Women in the Arts.

In her acceptance of the award, Prandini noted that "lava" was a perfect acronym for the award, particularly since her current production includes a volcano as a character. She described the volcano as a symbol for lesbianism, as one that "gives birth to herself, is the epitome of burning sensuality," possessing "long, flowing rivers of molten rock."

In addition to the three LAVA Awards, Distinguished Contribution Awards were presented to individuals from the six Bay Area chapters of BACW in their communities: Reverend Dr. Janie Spahr of Marin; the East Bay's Arlene Mose; Magi Fedorka of Sonoma; the South Bay's Ginny Hagopian; the Central Valley's Diane Darling; and Arminda Montoya of the Mid-Peninsula.

"A Fund of Our Own" serves the community by providing financial support for a wide range of projects and services in the areas of arts and culture, education, health and human services, and legal rights. The funds from this philanthropic program are distributed through the Horizons Foundation, serving the lesbian and gay community. Interested parties may contact the Horizons Foundation at 870 Market Street, Suite 488, San Francisco, 94102 or call (415) 398-2333 for more information. ▼

Schwarzenegger teamed up for a benefit auction last week that raised $110,000 for L.A. AIDS groups; a pair of size-12 boots once worn by Arnie fetched $11,000.

In Washington, Senate hearings on President Clinton's plan to end the ban against gays in the military begin next Monday, March 29.

And I realize that Hillary-bashing is supposed to be the latest thing, but I think the woman is great. Still, have you heard this one? George Bush and the Clintons end up in heaven on the same day. On his throne, God asks Bush his name and occupation, then bids him to sit at his right side. Then God peers down and says to Hillary: "And what's your name, young lady?" She replies: "It's Hillary Rodham Clinton, sir - and I believe you're in my seat." ▼

Gay Youth Gets Appreciative Audience at Woodside High

by Marv. Shaw

Homecomings are often mixed bags of emotions, as producer Pam Walton learned in February when she returned briefly to Woodside High School. Walton had left a job as an English teacher at Woodside several years ago to learn video production, so when she came back to screen her production Gay Youth at a teachers' training session, she gave her former colleagues not only a look at her new creation, but also her true self.

Preparation for the presentation of Gay Youth had been initiated at the beginning of the fall semester by Joyce Fulton and Paul Williams, former faculty friends of Walton's, who felt her video was just the right instrument to foster gay sensitivity at Woodside. Of all the times Gay Youth had been presented since its general release in June 1992, Walton says she found that one the most affecting.

"It was a warm welcome from most people," Walton recalled, "with lots of hugs. But there were some long faces all throughout the session."

Before the screening, a panel from Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays spoke, including longtime PFLAG leader Ann Davidson and Sequoia High social studies teacher Rod Liner, who has a gay son and who includes a unit on understanding gay people in his classes each year. They illustrated their experiences, transformations, and realizations to the 150 assembled teachers and guests.

Then Walton came on to express how she felt coming back — and coming out. Her remarks were followed by much applause, but the "long faces" were still staring back at her. Woodside Principal Jerry Baker made what Walton described as a very enlightening introduction to the video. Then the 40-minute Gay Youth ran.

Walton's video concentrates mostly on Bobby Griffith, who committed suicide at 20 because of his feelings of helplessness at being gay, and Gina Gutierrez, who embraced her gayness while still in high school with help from her family.

"The response was very good," Walton told the Bay Area Reporter, with some in the audience literally moved to tears. Unfortunately, Walton said, she was disappointed that most follow-up questions were about how the video was made. However, before the session concluded some teachers formed a committee to see how the issues raised by the video could be brought to the classrooms and incorporated into the curriculum.

The most rewarding reaction was from Sequoia High School District Superintendent Merle Fruehling, who strode to the microphone to declare the in-service training "the most moving I had ever experienced in all my years in education." From the audience then came a ringing male voice to declare, "That's leadership, Merle!"

Actually, Walton explained in a recent interview, promotion of Gay Youth has been going on for many months, with the Bay Area Network of Gay and Lesbian Educators (BANGLE) as her industrious collaborators. The plan is to offer copies of the videotape to high schools at a nominal figure as part of a plan to get it known and its educational value established.

As a means of reaching teachers who would be most apt to use the video in their classroom instruction, Walton and BANGLE obtained the names and addresses of California English and Social Studies teachers from the U.S. Registry of Teachers. A brochure, which the producers made as professional as possible, was then mailed to 8,700 teachers in this state.

The response: orders for 25 copies. While that might not seem like many for such a large campaign, it is better than that gotten by most such efforts, especially for such a sensitive and controversial product, Walton pointed out.

Also, positive responses were received from many sources, with individual teachers stating such things as "I wish someone had told me that I was okay when I was a teen" and "I used it in a training session for juvenile court case workers and will be using it again for a presentation in the schools."

Institutions, such as New York's Hetrick-Martin Institute responded: "This film should be required viewing for all young people — and for the adults who care for them."

"But of course there were the negative replies too," Walton added wryly. These letters had such statements as "I am very shocked that you send such materials through the school mails, which are handled by students. You should show greater respect for educators — gay or not!" Another: "Where's your permission to 'out' me to my school? I teach in a very conservative city, and I am going have a very hard time explaining why you have sent me — and only me — this literature." Another, most reflective of fear: "Your flier on gay youth may cause me the loss of a job I've had for 24 years."

While the San Francisco response of ordering a total of three copies to be used in the local Project Ten is encouraging, the most astonishing must be the 35 which came in from Manhattan alone after Walton made a presentation to 150 people at Hunter College, in New York City, in October. "It showed me that making a personal appearance to add information and answer questions was an invaluable promotional incentive," Walton stated.

Not that the video has lacked notice in many quarters. The most notable was the Golden Eagle award for documentaries from CINE (the Council for Non-theatrical Events). Walton is hopeful that "Gay Youth" will win a gold (or silver or bronze) apple at the National Educational Film/Video Festival in Oakland this month. She is also confident that KQED will program it in Gay Pride Month in June.

The next stage in the video's progress is a promotion in New York and Massachusetts. It will be similar to the California effort, but there will be some shift in the target group, Walton said. There will be a concentration on social studies teachers, counselors, and home economics people: Walton explained that the prospects were considered promising in the latter group because those classes often concentrate on living skills.

Because costs are high — the California effort cost $2,000 for printing the brochures and $3,000 for the mailing — efforts must be made constantly to secure donations. Some resources have been generous. The Columbia Foundation contributed $5,000, with the same amount coming from the Paul Robeson Fund. Locally, Bay Area Career Women has given substantial support.

The Robeson Fund has already contributed to start-up costs for Walton's next project, a video concentrating on family values. "It will be my own story," she explained. "Much of my own life will be involved, including the attitudes of my right-wing Republican father, with whom I have not spoken for 16 years."

But it's the donations from individuals that encourage Walton most. Tax deductible donations can be made by making checks payable to BANGLE, and mailing them to Pam Walton, Box 391025, Mountain View, CA 94039. ▼

Social Workers Plan Capitol March

SACRAMENTO — Social workers and students from CSU Sacramento, who call themselves Social Workers for Social Responsibility are planning a solidarity march and demonstration at the California State Capitol in Sacramento on April 25. The march is planned to demonstrate solidarity with gay and lesbian civil rights marchers in Washington, D.C. for the April 25 March on Washington.

Joyce Miller, one of the group's organizers said, "Some of us are gay/lesbian and some are not. We want our voices to be heard with our gay and lesbian brothers and sisters to make sure the issues of social justice stay in the public consciousness." Miller's group is issuing a call to "all the men and women in California who, for one reason or another, were unable to make it to Washington D.C. but feel they want to participate in this historic occasion."

Miller is hoping that notices in gay/lesbian newspapers will result in organizations and individuals contacting her at (916) 736-0426, or another parade organizer, Monica Erdosh at (916) 457-3849, for more information about time and route of the march and other details.

Cops Who Abuse, and the Victims who Love Them

Los Angeles Police Officer Susan Clemmer told federal court jurors that Rodney King was "laughing, spitting and blowing blood" as she rode with him in an ambulance after his famous beating at the hands of the LAPD.

She said King, handcuffed and hog-tied, "was laughing. ... He kept saying 'fuck you,'" she said.

When they arrived at the hospital, she said King told Sergeant Stacey Koon, "I love you."

Coach Gets Players Laid, but "Nothing Homosexual" Happens

A popular high school football coach in Hemet, California, and his wife were arrested March 16 following allegations they arranged sex for his players off campus.

Authorities said Hemet High football coach Randy Brown, 38, and his 31-year-old wife, Kelly, were booked on suspicion of lewd conduct with a minor, a felony. Bail was set at $5,000 each.

Brown has coached varsity football at Hemet since 1985. Riverside County Sheriff's Department spokesman Henry Sawicki said the allegations surfaced in the past week and allegedly involve Brown's football players.

"At least one; there are others," Sawicki said.

Sawicki said the sexual activity allegedly occurred in recent months, at the couple's home near campus.

Authorities wouldn't detail the allegations at the time of arrest, but subsequent reports indicated Kelly Brown engaged in sex with the football players. It has not been reported if the coach watched. Sawicki did say there were no indications "any homosexuality" was involved.

Brown, who has been placed on administrative leave, encountered trouble at the school once before. In 1989, Brown submitted his resignation following allegations he encouraged his players to level racial slurs at opposing teams. He was eventually reinstated.

Luis Olivares Dies

Father Luis Olivares, an activist priest who championed the cause of poor immigrants in Los Angeles, has died of AIDS.

Archbishop Roger Mahony said March 19 that Olivares died late the previous day, and extended his condolences to "the many thousands ... whose lives were touched by his ministry."

Olivares, 59, contracted HIV from a contaminated blood transfusion after he was injured during a visit to South America in the 1980s.

He angered the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the 1980s when he declared his church a sanctuary for illegal aliens.

"We rejoice in the goodness and faithfulness that are the legacy of and lasting tribute to the life and ministry of Luis Olivares," Mahony said. "We recall that he fed the hungry, welcomed and sheltered the homeless and the stranger in our midst, instructed the ignorant and revered the dignity of every human person."

Anti-Choicers Must Pay Planned Parenthood $36K

LOS ANGELES — A unanimous state appeals court has ordered the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue to pay thousands of dollars in legal fees of a Southern California women's health clinic that was a target of demonstrations.

The Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District decided March 16 that Planned Parenthood of Santa Barbara, Ventura, and San Luis Obispo Counties was entitled to be repaid for the $36,000 it spent on a court injunction to stop anti-abortion protests by Operation Rescue.

Operation Rescue settled the suit by agreeing to stop photographing clinic patients and interfering with cars using the Santa Barbara clinic's parking lot in 1989. The organization did not admit any wrongdoing, and balked at paying fees required of a party losing a lawsuit.

But the appeals court said Planned Parenthood had "entirely prevailed," even though the case was settled, and up held a lower court order requiring Operation Rescue of Southern California to pay $36,365.

The court said the payment was warranted because the settlement produced results that protected an "important" right and was beneficial to the public.

'Outing' Reward: $10,000

by David O'Connor

A $10,000 reward has been offered to the first person who successfully outs a four-star officer on active duty in the U.S. military, a living American cardinal of the Catholic Church, or a sitting U.S. Supreme Court justice.

William Percy, professor at the University of Massachusetts and co-author of the book on outing Shattering the Conspiracy of Silence, offered the bounty in response to the military's harassment of gays, according to a statement from the Alexander Hamilton Post of the American Legion.

Percy, a member of the post, is a war veteran.

"I am offering this reward as an incentive to intrepid outers," Percy said. "The judiciary, every church and every branch of the military seem to be full of homosexuals, so that I must restrict my offer to the highest ranks of church and state."

To qualify for the reward, the outer must disclose the official's sexual orientation "to the public through the mass media in a way analogous to that in which Assistant Secretary of Defense Pete Williams was outed, and in such a way that neither the person outed, nor his or her colleagues of equal rank can effectively deny the accusation," the statement said.

If such an official comes out on their own, he or she will receive the $10,000.

The reward will be given by a panel of judges comprising author Paul D. Hardman, commander of the Alexander Hamilton Post; Professor Charles Shively of the University of Massachusetts; and activist and scholar James Kepner of Los Angeles. ▼

Clergy Fights Bill To Fight Clergy Sexual Molestation

United Press International

MADISON — A bill that has been introduced into the Wisconsin state Legislature to require clergy members to report suspected child abuse is now under fire from state preachers. Among the reasons given for their discomfiture is that they believe the bill would compromise confidentially and go against the separation of church and state outlined in the Bill of Rights.

Reverend George Daniels, executive minister of the American Baptist Churches of Wisconsin, who raised the First Amendment objection, also said that the bill would come too close to mandating the role of clergy in pastoral counseling.

The bill was introduced by Representative Peggy Krusick, D-Milwaukee, in response to increasing reports of priests and other clergy members sexually molesting children. It would add clergy members to the list of people currently required to report suspected child abuse.

Catholic and protestant religious leaders have said that although sexual misconduct by clerics is a serious problem, the bill is not workable. ▼

'All That Hatred and Bigotry Was Very Disturbing' Straight Singer Takes Aim At Military's Ban of Gays

by Bruce Mirken

Fred Small may be an avowed heterosexual, but the singer/songwriter who has long had a substantial following in the folk music world has no patience for the blatant homophobia that has surfaced in the debate over gays and lesbians in the military. Now he's decided to put his money where his mouth is, by releasing a satirical song on the subject, "The Marine's Lament, or, the Pink Peril," and donating one dollar from each cassette sold to the Human Rights Campaign Fund.

Small wrote the song in January, while performing in North Carolina. One night he called in to a local radio talk show on which the military controversy was the main subject. "I was the only person I heard in an hour and a half supporting the idea of gays in the military," he recalls. "Hearing all that hatred and bigotry stated so unapologetically was very disturbing."

The song that resulted is a wicked satire, sung from the point of view of a soldier, backed by an acoustic guitar and a bit of military snare. About halfway through, the tune takes a sudden and unexpected twist, with a surprise ending that the singer (in what he admits is a shameless ripoff of The Crying Game's marketing ploy) requested we not reveal.

When this reporter caught Small in concert in Pasadena in February, the predominantly straight audience loved it, responding with gales of laughter and applause. They also responded when Small made a pointed and emotional plea for the crowd to get involved in the issue, an appeal that has now become a regular part of his show. "Justice and fairness," he says, "are everybody's fight. Everybody has to speak out on this. It's not just up to gays to support gay rights, it's the challenge of the majority to support civil rights for minorities."

The positive response, he notes, has been almost universal, with numerous requests to send copies of the tune to the likes of General Colin Powell and Senator Sam Nunn.

Small, whose acoustic sound and topical themes place him squarely in the folk tradition of Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger, and the young Bob Dylan, has dealt with gay and lesbian subjects before. "Scott and Jamie," from his 1988 album I Will Stand Fast is based on an actual incident in his home state of Massachusetts in which then-Governor Michael Dukakis ordered two young boys removed from the home of their gay foster parents — the only loving home the children had ever known. The removal, Small says, happened "without any hearing, without any cause, and in the middle of a huge crisis in the lack of available foster homes. It was a cowardly and infuriating decision."

The song is beautiful and heartbreaking but — typical of Small's songwriting — contains at least as much hope as anger:

*Love is love
No matter who, no matter where*

*Love is love
And a child knows when it's there*

They can pry away the fingers that graced these walls with dirt

*They can pull us apart
They can lie, oh they can hurt*

*But love leaves a trace
And the heart holds a place for love's return*

Another of Small's songs, "Everything Possible," has become familiar to gay audiences as a staple in the recordings and performances of the Flirtations, the all-gay a cappella quintet. The exquisite lullaby was written for a lesbian friend whose son was beginning to pick up homophobic ideas of "masculinity" from his friends at school. The Flirts report that this graceful antidote to macho swagger has become their most-requested song.

Although he often writes about painful subjects, an underlying sense of hope radiates through Small's lyrics and his warm baritone. Most topical songs, he says, never rise above anger, never connect to the possibility of triumphing over adversity. That's where he parts company with the general run of current rock and rap artists who address social issues. "My music has as much to do with making change as with perceiving problems," the songwriter reflects. "It's the difference between rebellion and revolution. My music has a tremendous amount of faith in people."

["The Marine's Lament, or, The Pink Peril," can be ordered from Small Potatoes, 1-800-788-6043, P.O. Box 0765, Acton, MA 01720-0765. Price is $4 for each cassette, plus shipping and handling ($2.50 for the first 1 or 2 cassettes, $.50 for each additional cassette). Checks should be payable to Small Potatoes.]▼

Gay-Bashing Puts Straight Man in Coma

by Mike Salinas

As is frequently the case, another victim of a gay bashing has been revealed to be a heterosexual: a 29-year-old violinist with Poland's Cracow Philharmonic Orchestra was hospitalized by a Brooklyn man who mistakenly believed the musician was gay.

Edgar Melendez, 19, was convicted March 10 of second-degree assault for his role in the incident and faces a maximum of two to seven years in prison, according to the Brooklyn District Attorney's Office.

The jury found that on April 7, 1991, Melendez and two other men beat Jaroslaw Sroga viciously enough to leave Sroga in a coma for a week and to cause brain damage that affected his professional career. According to testimony, Sroga needed two years of intensive rehabilitation to regain his position with the orchestra.

Sroga was a visitor to the U.S. when the attack took place. He now has no memories of the confrontation.

Melendez testified during the trial that Sroga "waved at him in a manner that he thought was sexually offensive, and that he declared, 'I'm not a faggot,'" according to the DA's office.

Melendez said he punched Sroga in retaliation after the violinist spit in his face.

Anthony Quiles, 18, and Edward Nelson, 17, who also were charged in the attack, both pleaded guilty to first-degree assault just before the case was given to the jury for deliberations. Quiles is expected to serve three to nine years, Nelson a term of two to six years.

According to published news reports, police believe Sroga is not gay.▼

LIVING BENEFITS CAN CURE ONE OF AIDS' MOST DEVASTATING SIDE EFFECTS.

The fight against AIDS is tough enough.

What you don't need is a separate struggle with one of its most devastating side effects—a struggle with serious financial problems. For many people, a life insurance policy can provide an immediate and welcome source of cash to pay for medical care, housing, transportation or just a vacation to rest and relax.

As a general rule, we can offer from 55% to 80% of the face value of our clients' policies. The final amount depends on a variety of factors, including an evaluation of your medical records—which are held in strictest confidence—by our staff doctors.

Ryan White Awards Lambasted

by Peg Byron

NEW YORK (UPI) - Furious local health officials denounced recent federal awards of millions of dollars in AIDS funds March 19, saying they shortchanged minorities and areas stricken by poverty, homelessness, and drug addiction.

New York City got less than half of the funds it requested through the Ryan White Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990, receiving just over $15 million.

Newark, N.J., received no money at all.

A total of $91 million was awarded to 25 different municipalities around the country, without any public announcement, on March 5 by the Health Resources and Services Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"The roof blew off and we didn't even have a roof," blurted one health worker in Newark.

"New York was treated dreadfully. It's catastrophic," said Dr. David Rogers, vice chairman of the National AIDS Commission and chairman of New York state's advisory council on AIDS.

"It was, I thought, arbitrary, ill-advised and really ignores the plight particularly of African-Americans with HIV and AIDS," he said, adding, "It was bureaucracy at its worst" at its worst.

An HRSA spokesman in Rockville, Md., said that an outside consulting group made the award choices based in part on whether an applicant had spent all its funds from the previous year.

The spokesman, Mark Roebuck, said New York and Newark probably fared the worst among the grant recipients, although he said none got as much as they requested.

The money is slated for AIDS drugs, services, housing and prevention in a year when the expanded AIDS definition is expected to add about 40 percent more eligible patients to the caseloads in many cities.

Comment was not immediately available from Newark's health department, where legal action has entangled expenditures of Ryan White funds.

At New York's largest private AIDS service agency, David Hansell said New York's spending was on track and added, "It's a message from HRSA to people with AIDS in New York City to drop dead."

"The bottom line is that this loss of funds will translate into deaths for individuals who will not get services they would otherwise have," said a high-ranking state health official in Albany, N.Y.

"The awards process did not fit the complexion as well as the complexity of the problem," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Rogers charged that the competitive process for awarding grants to 25 metropolitan areas around the country was based on rules that favored areas with success serving easier to reach populations.

"The ground rules have little to do with the number of people actually sick," he said. "It's not too tough to get care to well-educated, middle-class gay men, instead of drug-using individuals with no address."

New York's award was about $21 million less than the $36.3 million requested. A March 11 meeting in Manhattan between HRSA and New York health officials broke down into "a huge screaming match, with people throwing things at each other," said one official speaking on condition of anonymity.

HHS Secretary Donna Shalala expressed concern about the funds at an earlier meeting with city Health Commissioner Dr. Margaret Hamburg, who sent the secretary a detailed letter arguing the unfairness of the award Friday.

The awards were part of the supplemental grant within the Ryan White CARE Act and were in addition to another $91 million awarded earlier based on an objective formula.

Citywide AIDS policy coordinator Ronald Johnson said of the award, "It does have the appearance that those cities that have large communities of color and are triply impacted by the epidemics of substance abuse, TB, and HIV are being severely shortchanged."

"It will mean more suffering for people, including women, who have been traditionally underserved," Johnson said. ▼

Researchers Study the Role of Alcohol in HIV Transmission

United Press International

PHILADELPHIA — Doctors at Philadelphia's Thomas Jefferson University hospital say drinking alcohol may increase the risk of infection with HIV.

For those already infected with the AIDS virus, the doctors say drinking alcohol causes the disease to reproduce rapidly.

In a study published in the Journal of Infectious Diseases, researchers examined white cells from 60 people who spent a weekend drinking various amounts of alcohol. Blood was drawn before and after the weekend and the white cells were cultured and exposed to the AIDS virus.

The study found higher levels of the disease in those who had consumed alcohol. Researchers say the amount or kind of alcohol did not seem to make much difference.

Jefferson researcher Dr. Omar Bagasra said, "The take-home message is, if you are going to drink alcohol, be careful and have safe sex. For people who are already HIV positive, we would advise them not to drink at all."

Researchers say the results only had been seen in the lab, and there had been no experiments on humans.

The researchers say they also found the white blood cells known as "killer" T cells, which are believed to inhibit the spread of HIV, did not function as well in the alcohol-tainted cells.

Studies done in mice show similar results, and Bagasra said they are planning studies with HIV-positive volunteers who drink readily. ▼ eral government's Ryan White Care Act.

With local funds drying up, Salinas predicted to the B.A.R. there could be a scramble for federal grants.

"There's going to be a lot more people going after the Ryan White Care Act grants," said Salinas. "Still, our philosophy is not to squirrel away money or stockpile it, we'll just work harder."

More organizations vying for federal grants is a probability. Even if California doesn't run out of money in May, the state is expecting a deficit of at least $8.5 billion. San Francisco county has a deficit of $175 million, while Santa Clara and Marin counties are both running deficits estimated at more than $50 million. Few are expecting AIDS funding to survive this year's budget axe.

Not all AIDS service providers in the Bay Area can survive deep budget cuts, however. San Francisco's Shanti Project, the nation's largest provider of housing to AIDS patients, receives $2.6 million of its $5.5 million budget from government grants. It rarely has any savings and has actually run out of money during the past two fiscal years. A recent scandal involving alleged financial mismanagement would likely hinder an attempt to increase fundraising revenues or mount an influential lobbying campaign.

And Operation Concern, the Bay Area's largest provider of mental health care to PWAs, also has no contingency plan for budget cuts. It receives more than $300,000 in government grants out of a $2 million budget. Director of Operations Kevin McGinn told the B.A.R. that a funding suspension would significantly impact mental health care services to Bay Area PWAs.

"Even though we're part of a much larger fiscal umbrella [California Pacific Medical Center], we're still very much dependent on our funding," McGinn said. "The impact is that we'll have to lay off staff and cut services." ▼

Military Tries — Unsuccessfully — To Create Meinhold 'Discord'

by David O'Connor

Gay ban proponents found effective ammunition in a court deposition suggesting gay Petty Officer Keith Meinhold's return to active duty disrupted operations. Problem is, Meinhold's lawyer said, the deposition is wrong.

In a document distributed to media and on Capitol Hill, Captain Gregory Markwell claims Meinhold's return to Moffett Field sparked "a discordant note" among troops. Markwell asserts that some personnel refused to fly with Meinhold, forcing the Navy to rework schedules.

What Markwell's statement does not point out is that commanding officers at Moffett Field, according to Meinhold's attorney, John McGuire, encouraged personnel to seek reassignments rather than work with Meinhold.

Markwell's statement was written two months ago and was stricken and never considered by the court deciding Meinhold's case, McGuire said.

"Distribution of this highly misleading, biased, and properly stricken litigation document represents a desperate effort to tarnish Meinhold's highly successful return to active duty," McGuire said.

After Meinhold was temporarily reinstated November 12 to his position as sonar technician and instructor, his commanding officers launched a campaign to sabotage him, McGuire said. That campaign included:

- Formally and repeatedly announcing Meinhold's sexual orientation to all members of his unit, as well as his incoming students;

- Repeatedly assembling sailors to tell them that although a judge had ordered Meinhold's return, Navy policy still excluded gays and Meinhold's presence violated that policy;

- Encouraging sailors and students to verbally express their unwillingness to associate with gays;

- Telling all sailors and students they could be reassigned if they were uncomfortable working with Meinhold.

"Surprisingly," McGuire said, despite this blatant effort to encourage disharmony, only a few sailors, and none of Meinhold's students, expressed a desire to avoid working with Meinhold.

It was commanders' harassment and their dwelling on Meinhold's sexual orientation that led to the alleged reduced morale, McGuire said.

"Despite this repugnant effort by command, Meinhold continued to receive overwhelming support and encouragement from the vast majority of his fellow sailors," McGuire said.

McGuire said that since Meinhold was permanently reinstated on January 28, command's harassment has ended and Meinhold's return has become a "non-event."

Meinhold was discharged after he came out on national television last year. U.S. District Court Judge Terry Hatter reinstated Meinhold and ruled the military ban on gays is unconstitutional. Although assailed by the Department of Justice, that ruling has been upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco. ▼

Meholick

our best shot. Without an office, it's going to be tough to answer the military's response to our appeal. I hate to beg, but we really need some help."

Spriggs, who is heterosexual, accepted the case when a friend of his, attorney Bob Maloney of San Diego, went to him for help. Spriggs said Maloney is living on Social Security benefits and has no money to pour into the court battle either.

Assisting Spriggs and Maloney are Rabbi Barry Albin, an attorney in Kansas, and Navy-appointed defense attorney Lieutenant James Douglas, neither of whom returned phone calls from the Bay Area Reporter by press time.

Spriggs sought help in the case from Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, which declined, citing its high case load and limited resources.

'Big, big constitutional issues'

Spriggs said Meholick's case is important because it will set wide-ranging legal precedents.

"We're talking now about very serious legal precedents involved in this one," Spriggs said. "There are constitutional issues here that are right at the top."

According to Spriggs, those issues include a coerced confession, denial of effective use of counsel, violation of the Fifth Amendment right against self incrimination, acceptance of perjured testimony, and a judge's failure to convert an unacceptable guilty plea to innocent.

Three sailors originally accused Meholick of forcing them to have sex. Those charges came after Meholick disclosed that a superior officer had taken funds from a general account and deposited them in his personal checking account. Spriggs said he believes the charges against Meholick were made in retaliation for his disclosure.

Two of the three accusers later admitted they had lied about Meholick forcing them to have sex. Only one of the accusers — one of those who recanted — testified at Meholick's court-martial, according to Spriggs.

Also, Meholick's Navy defense counsel coerced a guilty plea from Meholick while he was on the anti-depressant drug Trazodone, Spriggs said. Meholick was put on the drug when he attempted suicide after being charged.

And, Spriggs said, the judge in Meholick's court-martial illegally accepted his guilty plea because Meholick said in court that he could not recall the incidents to which he pleaded guilty.

"We're up against big, big constitutional issues here," Spriggs said. "I can't imagine how anybody who has any love for the law could back away."

'You want to take every case'

Suzanne Goldberg, Lambda staff attorney, said the organization receives hundreds of requests for help each month and cannot take on all the cases that come its way.

"The goal of our work is to find the best cases we can to defend and secure the rights of lesbians and gay men," Goldberg said. "So we evaluate the cases that come into us and take into consideration how a particular case might benefit a larger population of people beyond the individual plaintiff. We also take into consideration our resources and where we're focusing our attention."

Goldberg said Lambda now has 50 lawsuits on its docket, including cases brought by Dusty Pruitt, Joe Steffan, and Margarethe Cammermeyer, each challenging the military ban on lesbians and gays.

Lambda's staff includes three attorneys in New York and three attorneys in Los Angeles. An office is set to open in Chicago this month, adding one more attorney to Lambda's full-time staff. Additionally, the organization relies on hundreds of lawyers across the country who work on call.

"Many cases are important and we have to make some choices," Goldberg said. "It's not to say we don't give support to people when we don't take their cases. We would be happy to provide information [Spriggs] needs. You want to take every case — you just can't."

Michael Petrelis of Queer Nation criticized Lambda for declining to take Meholick's case.

"The Meholick case is important to the gay rights movement," Petrelis told the B.A.R. "I know that Meholick's lawyer, Bob Spriggs, who is heterosexual, also doesn't have the resources, but he is still able to work on Meholick's case. How much resources does one need to write a letter? Can't Lambda write a letter to Clinton or to Les Aspin? What do they need? Twenty-nine cents to be able to buy a stamp. At this point, the straight community has done more on Meholick's behalf than the gay community has. And that's deplorable." ▼

Clinical Study for MAI Infection

ViRx Inc., a private clinical research center, is recruiting subjects with a confirmed AIDS diagnosis or T-cell counts below 100 for a Phase I/II clinical trial of TLC G-65 for the treatment of MAI infection. TLC G-65 is a liposome-encapsulated form of the widely used antibiotic gentamicin. Liposomes are organic substances used as envelopes around synthetic drugs to assist in the drugs' delivery to targeted sites within the human body. TLC G-65 is taken up by the organs of the body in which concentrations of MAI are highest. Early studies indicate that TLC G-65 may reduce the amount of MAI in the blood and improve the symptoms of people infected with MAI.

There is no charge for participation in this study. If you are interested in this study or other clinical trials for HIV infection, please call ViRx at 474-2233. Women and minorities are encouraged to participate.

Obituaries

Andrew F. Leo 1949-1993

Andrew Francis Leo, Director of Design at the Chicago Historical Society, died on March 9 of AIDS-related illness.

He spent his last days in his home, which he'd extensively renovated and rebuilt over the past decade, surrounded by his loved ones.

Andy first became aware of his fascination with architecture while working as a conscientious objector in California in 1973, and this interest was confirmed by his experience with the Boston Architects Collaborative and with Michael Prodanou & Associates in the mid-seventies. He moved to Chicago to complete his formal education in 1977, and graduated as a Bachelor of Architecture, with high honors, from the Illinois Institute of Technology in 1982. He worked as a draftsman and an architect for Krueck and Olsen Architects, and on the restoration of Chicago's historic Monadnock Building, but his true apprenticeship was served under the tutelage of A. James Speyer, Curator of the Twentieth Century Painting and Sculpture at the Art Institute of Chicago. Speyer was Andy's mentor during his tenure as an Installation Assistant at the AIC between 1982 and 1984, and helped him develop his interest and skills as a museum designer.

Andy is survived by his sisters Nancy Balow, Judy Presnol, and Debra Corrigan; by his niece Mari Balow; and by his longtime companions Michael C. Botkin and Steven J. Finlay. A memorial service was held in his honor at the CHS on March 12. Andy asked that, in lieu of flowers, donations be made in his name to either AIDS Treatment News (at P.O. Box 411256, San Francisco, CA 94141) or to Test Positive Aware Network (at 1340 W. Irving Park, Box 259, Chicago IL 60613). His co-workers at CHS have established The Leo Fund, to support design-related travel opportunities for CHS employees; those interested in contributing to it should contact the Chicago Historical Society (Clark Street at North Avenue, Chicago, IL 60614, Attention: Nancy Van Brundt). ▽

Patrick James Bielucki Dec. 17, 1952-Jan. 12, 1993

Patrick Bielucki was born in Maryland and spent his youth and young adult life residing in Pennsylvania with Mother, Kay; father, Chester; sister, Barbara; and brothers Mike, Allen, and Leon Bielucki.

Patrick moved to San Francisco in 1979 and then to Sausalito in 1990. His last two years were spent in Stockton, with his partner in life, Jeff. He attended Delta Community College and worked in Delta's Library Media Center. A "Cowboy Mass" memorial was offered on January 14, 1993, at the Annunciation Cathedral in Stockton.

Patrick's love for Western history and folklore was the cornerstone of his passion for penning cowboy poems, many of which were published and included in the archives of several colleges and Universities in Utah and Montana. Patrick's interest in equestrian studies and horse-packing brought him across the Jarbridge Wilderness of North-eastern Nevada, where his remains are scattered.

Patrick passed away peacefully in his sleep on January 12, 1993, with his partner, Jeff, at his side. His love for life and his passion to live life to the fullest will be remembered by all who had the honor and the pleasure to have him in their lives. ▽

Carroll A. Bjorseth March 11, 1993

Carroll A. Bjorseth, 65, SF resident for 38 years, made his peaceful and loving transition at Maitri Hospice, March 11, 1993. Angels, his friend Conrad Gilmore and Maitri Hospice caregivers shared the joy of his departure.

He is survived by his nephew, Ronald of Phoenix, AZ; his brothers Alfred and Albert, a Shanti Project friend Rick, and a large fellowship of the spirit in friendship with Bill W.

Carroll leaves a legacy of beautiful flowers, blue sky, laughter, happiness, joy and now a new sense of freedom from the complications of HIV-disease and AIDS.

The Neptune Society handled arrangements - 229-5706.

Contributions may be made in Carroll's name to Maitri Hospice, 61 Hartford, SF 94114, (415) 863-8508. ▽

Stanley A. Roberts Nov. 11, 1947-March 14, 1993

Stan died about noon on Sunday, March 14 at the Zen Hospice Project Guest House Residence in San Francisco after several years of living with AIDS.

Stan was born in Akron, Ohio, and leaves an immediate family of his mother and step-father Frances and Harry Jensen, his brother and sister-in-law John and Becky Roberts of Akron; his daughter and son-in-law Christi and Duane Smith and his grandson Cory Smith of Coshocton, Ohio; his father and step-mother Willard and Margaret Roberts and his brother Clyde of Houston, Texas.

His many, many friends from his association with the MCC in San Jose, his being clean and sober for the past five and a half years and his last job at United Airlines in San Francisco will miss Stan being Stan.

There will be a memorial service for Stan at the MCC, 150 Eureka Street, San Francisco, at 1 p.m. on Saturday, April 3, 1993, with a reception to follow.

Donations may be made to your favorite AIDS organizations in Stan's name. ▽

Chuck Mitchell March 17, 1993

Chuck Mitchell died the evening of St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1993, due to complications from AIDS. Chuck came to San Francisco in 1969 from his hometown of Freedom, Pennsylvania. He is survived by two brothers, Ronny and Rick. At his bedside were his friends Donna, Theresa and Terry Ann. In his heart were loving thoughts from his Aunt Mary and her daughter Sandi. Special thanks to everyone at Maitri Hospice.

Any remembrances of gifts should be sent to Maitri, 61 Hartford, SF 94114. There will be a memorial service at Daphne Funeral Home, 1 Church St., (Between Hermann and Duboce) at 6:30 p.m., Friday, March 26. ▽

Richard Bruce Lippman Sept. 27, 1940-Jan. 26, 1992

Richard Bruce Lippman of San Francisco passed on peacefully on January 26, 1992 at Davies Medical Center, after a five year battle with AIDS. He is survived by his father, Charles; sister, Cheryl; and two nieces, Dawn and Samantha, who live in Florida. Also by his aunt Winnie of St. Louis and his brother Michael of Los Angeles.

Born in NYC on Sept. 27, 1940, Richard grew up there and in New Jersey. He received a B.S. in education from the University of Missouri at Kansas City in 1965, and a M.S. in education from Southern Illinois University in 1971. Richard worked as a teacher in the Midwest and in New York. He was also active in theater. Richard also worked in the catering business in New York and in San Francisco after his move in 1985.

Richard loved to travel and shop; three of his favorite cities were New York, San Francisco and Amsterdam. He leaves friends in all of these places, and many others as well. He will be missed by all those whose lives he touched.

Richard was active until his death in the Shanti Project, as well as many other organizations. He was optimistic until the end. Donations can be made in Richard's name to Project Open Hand, 2720 17th St., SF 94110 or Shanti Project, 525 Howard St., SF 94105. A memorial service will be held at the end of April. For more information, contact Michael Lippman (818) 782-5017.

Goodbye my brother, though you are gone, I remain to fight!!! ▽

Mike Kozlowski

June 23, 1956-March 15, 1993

Born in Rochester, New York, Mike grew up surrounded by the love of his wonderful family.

He always talked about how much he cared for his family and was proud to be the big brother.

A graduate of the University of Pittsburgh, Mike was a devoted alumni.

He moved to San Francisco in 1979 and joined Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., where he worked as a dedicated employee until his death. He adopted San Francisco as his home. Mike lived most of his years in the Castro, where he developed a family of friends.

He is survived by his partner and soul-mate, Jeff, their dog Cassie, his parents, Connie and Donald; his brothers, Dave, Don and Steve and their wives and children, his grandmothers, other family and his many friends.

Mike will remain living in our hearts. We will miss his beautiful smile, his devoted friendship, and his love of life.

Watch over me, I'll be with you soon. I love you. ▽

Gary W. Curtis 1967-1993

Gary died February 17, 1993 in his SF home with his lover, Derald, and friend Debra, by his side. He was calm, peaceful, and in no pain. After a complicated and often painful bout with numerous AIDS-related illnesses, it seemed magical that he was able to spend his last weeks at home having another time of his life.

He fell in love with San Francisco while working at The Phoenix during the past 2½ years. He said he never thought of being older than 25—he just didn't ever think of being older. Maybe that is why he filled up every single second.

He is missed by family in Missouri, Illinois, Colorado, and Oklahoma, and by all his friends and co-workers. Gary wanted everyone to say goodbye in their own way. An informal gathering in his memory will take place at The Phoenix at a yet to be announced time. ▽

Kevin Hubbard 1949-1993

Kevin Hubbard, born in Modesto in 1949, passed away on March 14, 1993 in Oakland California. Mr. Hubbard earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in Art History from Stanford University and a Master of Arts degree in Art History from the University of California, Berkeley, where he conducted insightful research on the work of Albert Besanard.

Mr. Hubbard applied his artistic talents in landscape design and gardening with numerous clients throughout the East Bay.

His is fondly remembered by his mother and father, Carole and Jack Hubbard; his sister, Judi McKinney; his brother, Patrick Hubbard; and his friends. His family requests that any remembrances be donated to the AIDS Foundation, 25 Van Ness Ave, SF 94142, or to the charity of the donor's choice. ▽

David Francis Schaller January 28, 1993

David passed away at home on January 28, 1993, after a long battle with AIDS.

He is survived by his lover of eight years, Philip Peruzzo, and their loving dogs, Weanng and Diva. David had a love for classical music, gourmet cooking and traveling to Mexico. We will all miss your smile but know that you will always be in our hearts. Love, Phil and the kids, Kim and Val, and other dear friends. ▽

Oz Lynn

March 18, 1993

Homemaker, collector, car restorer, upholsterer, caregiver to babies in need at Oakland hospitals, Jack Russell Terrier breeder and trainer, wholesale travel professional, organizer of Colorado River rafting adventures, loving spouse of Gary Neumeier; died at home in the arms of his loved one.

Oz endured the torments of AIDS for five years. Never did he impose his sufferings on others. He inspired many through his courage, strength and integrity to be true to themselves and to reject hypocrisy. As much love as he received, it was but a morsel of the passion he had for his friends and life.

A celebration of Oz's life will be held at Duns Muir House and Gardens, Oakland, in the Gate House on April 3, 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Donations can be made to The Center in Berkeley where he received much support. ▽

Robin J. Daoud June 26, 1955-Jan. 5, 1993

Rob Daoud, Of Monterey, California, passed away peacefully, surrounded by his loving family at The Hospice of the Central Coast in Monterey.

Rob was a graduate of California State University at San Francisco. He was a computer programmer and systems analyst with Pacifi Bell during the late '70s and early '80s. Rob was fondly remembered as a waiter at Without Reservations. Rob led a very active life and made many friends easily, with his charm, sense of humor and striking looks. He was an avid sports fan and played on both the Gay Football League and Softball League. He loved dancing, especially Country and Western, and folk dancing. The Castro Folk Dancers were founded by Rob several years ago, and this group is still flourishing.

He is survived by his parents, Albert and Lila Daoud; three brothers, Alan, Mark, and Samir, all of Monterey.

We'll miss you, Rob. ▽

where they will be forwarded to the senators.

Although Falwell frames his letter around the issue of Achtenberg's confirmation, a clue to his real purpose can be found in the last four paragraphs, wherein he demands money twice in the space of seven sentences:

"The only way to stop Achtenberg from being confirmed by the Senate is for you to voice your outrage," the letter reads in bold type. "Your senators must hear from you and know that you absolutely oppose this lesbian nomination.

"Please sign and return your special message to both your senators with a gift of $25 or $35 to Liberty Alliance today.

"This is a crucial time for conservative Americans. We stand to see the homosexual community win yet another critical battle.

"But we can stop them. Please sign and return your special message to your senators along with a $25 or $35 gift immediately!"

He then signs the letter, "Sincerely and urgently, Jerry Falwell."

Pushing gay ban into law

Meanwhile, the National Association for Uniformed Services, a group of veterans and military retirees, has begun a petition drive urging federal lawmakers to vote the gay ban into law.

In direct mailings to voters across the country, the association sent petition cards that used the same computer technology; each postage-paid envelope addressed to the group's Washington, D.C., post office box is printed with the recipient's congressmembers' names.

John Morrison, associate legislative counsel at the National Association for Uniformed Services (NAUS), said the group has received 4,000 responses so far. He said he expects that number to increase when the association's magazine is distributed this week.

Founded in 1968 to lobby on legislation that affects its members, NAUS has worked on bills governing Medicare and health care. The association now includes 151,000 people — and tripled its membership in the last three years, according to NAUS literature.

NAUS employs 16 full-time staffers in its Springfield, Virginia, headquarters. "But we try to operate at two or three times our numbers," Morrison told the Bay Area Reporter.

Supervisor Roberta Achtenberg: what word is on her lips?

The petition drive is a nationwide campaign to "swamp" Congress with 1 million signatures and stop Clinton from opening the military to lesbians and gays, according to a letter from NAUS President J. C. Pennington, retired major general in the U.S. Army.

David Smith of the Campaign for Military Freedom, a lesbian and gay lobbying group working to end the ban, said Republican lawmakers are preparing a bill to codify the anti-gay policy.

Under a compromise reached by President Clinton and Senator Sam Nunn (D-Georgia), the Department of Defense has until July 15 to submit a plan for lifting the discriminatory policy.

"At that point we anticipate Senate Republicans to initiate some form of bill, whether that be an amendment or whatever, to codify the ban into law," Smith said. "That's the point when we need to have our 51 votes in the Senate."

Right-To-Die Case Gets Right-To-Lifers All Riled Up

by Mike Salinas

When brain-damaged Christine Basalacchi died in St. Louis March 8, it marked the end of her six-year coma, the end of six years of medical treatments provided by her loving parents, and the end of a much-debated lawsuit that allowed her to die, brought by those same parents. It was not, however, the end of the controversy.

In May 1987, Basalacchi was a passenger in a car that ran a red light and was hit by another vehicle. She was pulled from the flaming wreckage of the accident by a police officer, but never gained consciousness after the crash, which left her with severe brain damage.

Her father, Peter Basalacchi of St. Charles, Missouri, ultimately went to the state Supreme Court for the authority to remove the surgically implanted feeding tube that kept Christine "alive." Permission to do so was granted in January, setting the stage for a confrontation with several so-called "pro-lifers" who demonstrated — supposedly on Christine's behalf — outside the hospital.

Hospital officials where the woman died have reported hundreds of telephone calls from fundamentalist Christians objecting to the removal of her feeding tube. One hospital spokesman said many callers referred to Basalacchi's doctors as "murderers," and made threats that warranted the assignment of bodyguards to every doctor involved in the case.

Peter Basalacchi was at his daughter's side when a doctor pronounced her dead, hospital officials said. A neurologist who worked on Christine's case said her death was not painful.

"Nobody won," Peter Basalacchi said in a statement. "We all lost."

A statement released by the Basalacchi family said, "We appreciate the thoughts and prayers extended to Chris and our family over the past months, even those of you who did not agree with our decision. Please understand it was not an easy one."

The family's attorney, William Colby of Kansas City, issued a statement that said, "If we can learn any lesson from this horrible ordeal, it is this: these decisions are no place for lawyers, courts, or right-to-life or right-to-die advocates." ▼

Colorado Update: The Boycott Grows

by Dennis Conkin

The City of Detroit, Michigan, and four national organizations have joined the boycott of Colorado because of the state's anti-gay constitutional Amendment 2.

A March 17 resolution by the Detroit City Council bans the expenditure of city funds for travel to and from Colorado — or any other state or locality with a law similar to Amendment 2. Also last week, the National Coalition on Domestic Violence announced it had cancelled its bi-annual national conference slated for Denver in July, and the Latin American Studies Association announced that it would not hold its 1995 conference in the "Mile High" city, either.

NCDV originally planned to hold the conference despite the boycott — and to address the Amendment issue during the meeting — but because member organizations announced that they would boycott the conference, the national group has decided to cancel the conference, NCDV office coordinator Rita Smith told the Bay Area Reporter.

The NCDV decision followed blasts from several local domestic violence groups that denounced the plan to forge ahead with the conference despite the increased violence to lesbians and gays caused by the Amendment.

The executive director of the Mid-Peninsula Support Network For Battered Women, Melissa Reed, called the NCDV's original decision to ignore the boycott "shameful." Her group was joined in its decision to boycott the Conference — which draws more than 1,200 people from around the country — by the Santa Clara Domestic Violence Council and the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors.

The Latin American Studies Association said its decision was based on a desire to "show support for the rights of its own gay and lesbian members and to maintain the group's commitment to the protection of human rights and academic freedom throughout the Hemisphere."

The Mathematical Association of America and the American Mathematical Society have also announced a decision to move their joint meeting, scheduled for January 1995 in Colorado, to an alternative site.

The economic loss to the state due to the boycott is estimated at more than $42 million, according to some figures. More than 100 cities, counties, statewide political organizations, corporations, and associations are participating in the boycott. ▼

Lesbians, Gays Charge NY Cops with Brutality Over St. Pats Spat

by Peg Byron

NEW YORK (UPI) - Many lesbian and gay protesters arrested at New York's St. Patrick's Day parade reported the next day their fingers and hands were numb and they had black and blue marks up their arms as a result of police mistreatment.

They charged that police severely and unnecessarily tightened plastic handcuffs used in the arrests, causing extreme pain — in some cases for up to five hours — while protesters were held in jail cells before they were released.

City Councilman Thomas Duane and Anne Maguire, a spokeswoman for the Irish and Lesbian Gay Organization (ILGO), said they expected to file complaints against police for using unnecessary force in the arrests.

Duane and Maguire were among the 228 ILGO members and supporters arrested on misdemeanor charges of defying a court order that specifically forbade March 17 protests on Fifth Avenue — the route of the St. Patrick's Day parade, whose sponsors had banned the gay group.

"I had been arrested Monday [March 15] with Jesse Jackson" at a protest against detention of HIV-infected Haitians in Cuba, Duane said, "but those handcuffs were not really painful.

"I believe there was one police officer who was tugging on people's cuffs as they were put into the van," he said.

"My arms are black and blue," said Christine Quinn, who also was arrested.

"I thought one woman would faint from the pain in the van," said Quinn, an aide to the openly gay Duane, adding that her own wrists swelled from the plastic handcuffs and police broke a scissors trying to remove the restraints.

Matthew Foreman, executive director of the Gay and Lesbian Anti-Violence Project and who monitored the arrests, said, "The tightening of handcuffs on gay and lesbian demonstrators to the point of pain is common practice. It is extremely difficult to prove and officers know that."

There were no reports of any of those arrested needing medical treatment, and no immediate comment from the police department, whose Commissioner Raymond Kelly and department fraternal groups marched in the parade.

Said one city official of the confrontation between police and demonstrators, "The tension level was exceedingly high. The energy was very negative."

Also among those arrested was the mayor's liaison to the gay community, Jan Carl Park, a veteran of many arrests from civil disobedience actions.

"This is the tightest I can recall [handcuffs] having been," said Park, who was fielding calls from ILGO protesters asking where they could complain about their injuries.

"The police behaved very professionally with us," he added, however, saying being arrested usually "is not a nice thing to happen."

Human Rights Commissioner Dennis DeLeon, who watched the arrests, agreed most police were well behaved but complaints about handcuffs even brought intervention from Chief of Department David Scott.

"We pointed out that the cuffs were too tight and [police] began changing," he said. Comment from Scott was not immediately available.

Police said no complaints were received by the Civilian Complaint Review Board the day after the arrests, but DeLeon said he was encouraging injured protesters to contact the board.

Foreman agreed that police otherwise behaved well, but he criticized as unfair the court order the Dinkins administration got against the protest and said those arrested should not be penalized. ▽

CUAV Community Watch

Sick, Sicker, Stickers

by Community United Against Violence Staff

A friend of Community United Against Violence (CUAV) brought in a little surprise he found last week. What he brought in was a day-glow orange sticker that said "I Love [a heart] Bashing Queers." This sticker was found plastered to windows on the building that houses Quan Yin Healing Arts, near Lyon Martin Women's Health Services on Market Street.

So far, this is the only incident of this type that has been reported to CUAV. If folks see more of these stickers however, please report the location to CUAV. Brightly colored stickers have been all the rage for expressing out identity for our communities for several years now. It is not surprising to see the hate-mongers and homophobes finally "borrow" one of our visibility strategies and use it for their own purposes. In fact, we can probably count on this single sticker being only the beginning of a growing campaign that will be fueled by homophobic ballot measures on the horizon.

CUAV needs to hear about the various incidents of hate and bigotry that you see or experience. Please call us at (415) 777-5500 during business hours to make your reports. If you are in a crisis situation, call (415) 333-HELP 24 hours a day. No incident is too small. Hate stickers hurt, too.

Whistle Thwarts Assault

Speaking of incidents, people may remember reading about the man who was almost assaulted at Noe near Market a couple of weeks ago. What saved him and stopped the assault? His whistle! He blew his whistle, the assailants fled and the neighborhood turned out to help him. That's how it works.

If you do not have a whistle, take the time to stop in at your local hardware store or call CUAV. CUAV has whistles galore and we want to get them to everyone who doesn't have one. Keep the whistle on your key chain. When you walk at night, walk with your whistle in your hand so that you can use it at a moment's notice, without having to fumble. A fumble might mean the difference between life and death.

'92 Hate Crime Statistics Reveal Danger Zones

Homophobic hate crime reports to CUAV in 1992 show the Castro and Mission Districts to be two of the most dangerous in the city for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons. Fully 37 percent of the hate crimes reported to CUAV occurred in the Castro. The Mission district was the second most dangerous location with 11 percent of the reports.

At the March 11 press conference where CUAV released its 1992 statistics, reporters continued to ask the same question: "Why are there so many incidents in the Castro, the 'heart' of the community?" The answer is simple and alarming — bashing is a sport, like hunting. It is premeditated and planned, so bashers go to those spots where they know there is "good hunting." Since the Castro has a reputation as being the "heart" of the community, the Castro is where the bashers go to bash. It's a similar situation for the Mission district on 16th between Guerrero and Mission, and then up Valencia. There are a number of bars and businesses that are lesbian/gay owned or for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender person patrons. We're there in numbers and we're out and visible. To a basher's mind — easy prey.

Whistles have been the deciding factor in preventing innumerable bashings in the Castro and Mission. Let's get these two neighborhoods in particular to become some of the safest neighborhoods in the City. Whistles can help us do this. Let's make these two neighborhoods bad hunting grounds for bashers and safe havens for all peaceful people of every stripe. ▽

Kenneth Cole

Compiled by Hollie Conley

Although only a few companies have shown the fairness to include lesbian or gay images in their advertisements, others are going even further and expressing support for civil rights as part of their campaigns. Kenneth Cole, New York-based maker of terrific shoes, is currently running an ad (in Vanity Fair and elsewhere) that includes a clever endorsement of overturning the ban against lesbians and gays in the military. The ad features a photo of a gay/lesbian demonstration outside a U.S. Army Recruiting Center. One of the demonstrators is carrying a "Gay Rights Now" sign. The ad copy reads "In support of our nation, everyone should have the right to bear arms — but not bare feet."

Give your support for this witty ad by writing to Mr. Kenneth Cole, President, Kenneth Cole Products, 152 West 57th Street, 15th Floor, New York NY 10019.

First Federal Bank

Also deserving praise is a recent ad from First Federal Bank of California. While Bank of America deceives the public about the Boy Scouts' policy of discrimination against gays, First Federal is showing itself as sensitive to the discrimination lesbians and gay men face. In its recent institutional advertising campaign, the bank included copy that read: "With continuing acts of bigotry, violence and ugly slurs directed against people based on their religion, the color of their skin, their sexual orientation or ethnic background...we must speak out against any acts of bigotry."

Why not write a letter of thanks to: Mr. Bill Mortensen, Chair of the Board, First Federal Bank of California, 401 Wilshire Blvd., Santa Monica, CA 90401

Banana Republic

More discreet but sexier are a recent series of Banana Republic ads. The clothing retailer's ads feature the tag-line "My chosen family" and include models portraying apparently lesbian or gay people. One ad features three women, one of them African American, in a car. Two of the women are in the back seat with their arms around each other, while one of them is holding and kissing the hand of the woman in the driver's seat. (Let's hope they parked first.) Another ad features two men and one woman; one of the men is caressing the others' bare chest, while the woman caresses his hand.

Send support to Robert Fisher, President and CEO, Banana Republic, 1 Harrison St., San Francisco, CA 94105.

AdWeek

Fighting the positive advertising trend and insisting that gender-bending is bad for business was Ms. Jerri Shaftel of the Celebrity Endorsement Network. In a recent issue of Adweek magazine (aimed at the advertising industry) Ms. Shaftel, discussing the value of celebrities doing commercial endorsements, said "For any...celebrity who wants an endorsement, a man has to be a man, and a woman, a woman. Any questions about sexuality plummet their value."

To suggest the commercial value of an open mind, write to Ms. Jerri Shaftel, Vice President, Celebrity Endorsement Network, 20700 Ventura Blvd., Suite 227, Woodland Hills, CA 91364; carbon copy to: Craig Reiss, Editor, AdWeek, 5055 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 90036.

Young lesbians in Mademoiselle

The March issue of the popular fashion magazine Mademoiselle included an unusual article called "Women in Love" on the new (17-25 year old) generation of lesbians. The article was headlined "Young lesbians: they're fresh, they're proud, they're comfortable with their sexuality. Having staked out their own issues, they're now defining a new style." The article, which is sure to reach many young lesbians who have no real access to the lesbian community, included discussion of political activism, "role-playing," safe sex, lesbian zines and lesbian slang. Also included was a useful resource list of organizations providing support and information for young lesbians and their families.

If you want to see more lesbians in Mademoiselle, make sure their positive feedback outweighs the negative. Write to Gabe Doppelt, Editor in Chief, Mademoiselle, Conde Nast Publications, 350 Madison Avenue, New York NY 10017.

Young lesbians on Jenny Jones

Young teenage lesbians held forth on a recent edition of the NBC daytime talk show Jenny Jones, keeping at bay an audience that wanted to know the difference between sex with a man or a woman. The young women (ages 16, 17, and 18) had all experienced sex with males ("boring and gross" and "they kiss like piranhas") and females ("emotional and spiritual connections"). Some of the audience members were troubled that the panelists preferred women and objected to their perceived masculine appearance.

The young lesbians handled all of the questions with a maturity beyond their years. The mother of one was in the audience and was supportive of her daughter. During the program one 16-year-old told of her attempts to commit suicide on three different occasions and started to cry. Jenny, who had demonstrated consistent support for the panel, hugged and comforted her.

Jones sometimes displays a tendency to sensationalize lesbian/gay issues but this time showed herself to be sensitive. Write: Jenny Jones, Ms. Debbie Glavin, Executive Producer, P.O. Box 3333, Chicago, IL 60654; send a carbon copy of your remarks to the show's syndicator: Mr. Jim Paratore, President, Telepictures Productions, 3300 Riverside Drive, Burbank, CA 91522. ▼

They Lied To Get In

by Karen Ocam

On March 29 U.S. Senator Sam Nunn (D-Georgia), will convene hearings on the appropriateness of lifting the ban against homosexuals serving in the military.

Pro-lesbian/gay supporters say the ban discriminates specifically against a class or group of people and therefore is unconstitutional. Ban supporters say the military necessarily discriminates all the time — against fat people, for instance — for the good of the mission and therefore is exempt from the same constitutional constraints as civilians.

But with the Cold War over, many Americans are asking: what mission? In fact over the past several years the all-volunteer military looks like an employment center, promising recruits an education, a career, or job skills for post-military life. "Be All That You Can Be," the Army pitches at Super Bowl half-time, and recession-weary lesbians and gays have responded.

In 1981 Angela Carrington "needed to expand." At 20 she was holding down two jobs — as a gas station attendant and a building security guard — and going to vocational school full time. She wanted to be a court reporter.

But, she says, she was "in a rut." And "life was tough" anyway as an African-American lesbian in Orlando, Florida, with fundamentalist, pentecostal, and Baptist ministers in the family. The Navy looked like a good alternative and Carrington lied to the recruiter to get in.

"I had no idea what to expect," Carrington said recently during a break from the national Black Gay and Lesbian Leadership Conference where she led a workshop on self-esteem. "I was totally ignorant about what military life was all about. I didn't know about the witchhunts or that your career could be totally ruined by someone hearing or suspecting you might be lesbian."

A naive E2 seaman stationed at Moffett Field in Santa Clara, Carrington kept to herself until an older (24-year-old), E5 petty officer made advances. "I was surprised that this straight woman wanted me," she says, "but being young, for me it was a blessing." Her superior made it clear that she did not consider herself a lesbian and that their sexual interludes were not to be construed as a lesbian affair.

But when Carrington thought that meant it was okay to date women off the base, her superior "put out that I was a lesbian. My reputation was ruined because of her explicit details of our sexual behavior," Carrington lied when asked directly if she was a lesbian but nonetheless a "witchhunt" ensued, compounded by threats and vandalism. She panicked when some Marines were, she believes, "sent to my barracks to hurt me." She moved off base.

Though never formally charged, Carrington was still "punished," assigned to cleaning men's urinals and the surrounding floor with a toothbrush. She was often called "dyke" and "ugly ET." She endured by becoming a "4.0 person" — the best in the command.

Eventually she made E5 in less than two years and was relocated to Hawaii as a "radioman." But the Navy persisted in trying to get her out — at one point she says, "planting a girl" in her room who later said Carrington kissed her. Again Carrington lied when asked if she was gay. But this time other women came forward to challenge the girl's veracity. And Carrington launched a duplicitous life — publicly purchasing birth control pills and moving her lover's male cousin into their off-base house.

Jeff Ford

After five years and an outstanding record, Carrington called it quits. Since then she has become a real estate broker and graphics designer based in Gardina. But most importantly Carrington, 32, looks for "healing ways of living."

Jeff Ford, 37, exemplifies another reason why people join the military: to "get straightened out." When he joined the Navy as an "old guy" of 26, he had just discovered he was gay and broken his engagement to his high school sweetheart, losing a lot of friends in the process.

"I went in because I was basically running away from myself and I wanted a structured environment," Ford said recently. "At the time I thought it was a good way to hide from my sexuality. So I lied to get in."

Ford wasn't too concerned about the lie, however. He enlisted in Montgomery, Alabama, and when the man in front of Ford was asked if he ever had sex with another man, he said "Well, no one but my dad," Ford recalls. "And the recruiter said 'Don't tell anyone else that ever again.' So I thought: okay I won't tell anybody either."

Ford went through the nuclear power program and ran nuclear power plants as an electrician's man on submarines. At one point he was stationed on the USS Guitarro out of San Diego. "People knew about me. It only freaks people out when they're insecure in their own sexuality," He says there is no "hanky-panky" on submarines because there is no time and no unmanned spaces.

Eventually Ford switched to supply and contracting and for a brief time was stationed in Okinawa, overseeing ship repair. But in April of 1989, one day after he'd been promoted to lieutenant after nine years of service, Ford was court-martialed based on two one-night stands discovered as a result of a Naval Investigative Service witchhunt.

According to Ford, the NIS tracks down sailors through Thai prostitutes at gay bars, "traps them," and "brow-beats" them, saying "they'll give them better discharges if they tell on other people." Ford only would speak to the NIS through a lawyer.

"I wasn't going to lie and I wasn't going to turn anyone else in. These incidents happened in my house in Hyama, Japan. These were people I knew," Ford says. "Twice — at my own house, off the base, consenting adults."

Ford subsequently isolated himself because he feared others would be trapped through "guilt by association." But, he says, "I found out the NIS was following me for several months and everyone I knew was suspect."

Several people spoke up for Ford at his court-martial. The assistant supply officer of the naval ship repair facility in Okinawa said Ford helped to turn the supply center around in the three months he was stationed there. Another senior officer said he knew Ford was gay — "and so what." And a high ranking Japanese national — an ex-colonel in the Japanese Air Force — said he "was the best person who worked here in ten years. Why would you even consider throwing him out?" Ford recalls.

After his court-martial, Ford was in "limbo" while the military wrestled with jurisdiction and paperwork though not allowing Ford to get a job to pay for his mounting legal, travel and phone bills.

"I had to start over again," Ford says. "You hear about the high suicide rates. If not for a few people ... I was lucky." Ford is now working as a computer expert developing software for the non-repetitive manufacturing. ▼

Palm Springs Top Year-Round

U.S. Resort For Gays

By Evan Hughes

National research among gay people in the U.S. has revealed they have three important requirements when they choose a resort holiday destination - masses of sunshine, lots of other gay people and plenty of local attractions and entertainment. Palm Springs wins in all three categories.

Great weather? Not just great. Flawless! In fact, Palm Springs is really the only truly year-round sunshine destination in the western world. When it's snowing in Provincetown, when the Russian River has turned damp and chilly and when the humidity drips in Key West, the sun shines on and on in the super dry air of Palm Springs - where it rains on an average of only 15 days a year!

Lots of gay people? Palm Springs has at least as many gay visitors as the older gay resorts and a huge local contingent of gay residents who have moved to the desert because of its immense appeals.

What other gay resort can offer - within just a few miles - an awe-inspiring aerial skyway climbing 8,500 feet into the mountains, a state-of-the-art legitimate theater which hosts touring national theater productions and great name performers, fashionable boulevards studded with internationally-renowned shops and the opportunity to dodge waterfalls in beautiful Indian canyons?

You can spend half a day jeeping through the desert - and the other half soaking up glamor and glitz. Not for nothing is Palm Springs still the playground of the Hollywood community and much of the rest of the world's "beautiful people". All in all, it's tres gail

There are almost 30 hotels and inns in Palm Springs which cater especially to gay people. Gay men gravitate to some, lesbians to others. A few encourage a great mix of both sexes.

There's a gay hotel to suit every preference - from the simply elegant to the frankly sexy. Muse to the strains of Vivaldi in an exquisite garden or vibrate to the latest disco hits with the trendies.

Eating out in Palm Springs is a sheer delight. There's a dazzling selection of great eateries - from superb major-name hotel dining rooms and internationally-known haute cuisine establishments to the numerous restaurants which are patronized exclusively by gay people.

Similarly there's a tremendous range of nightspots which stay open until 2 A.M. Practically every night brings a different contest or party. There are a couple of "corrals" for western gear while leather enthusiasts parade in others. Or you can watch gays wrestle in whipped cream!

In this day and age, many gays very properly wonder about their safety and whether they will be made welcome when they travel. In Palm Springs, gays (both visitors and the huge local contingent) lead a relaxed life secure in the knowledge that they are accepted and welcome, not merely tolerated.

Escape... within the privacy of our beautifully landscaped and gated grounds. Nine studio, one & two bedroom suites await... each is beautifully furnished and immaculately maintained for your comfort. All just steps from a sparkling heated pool and soothing spa... where swim suits are optional. A private resort for men... offering all the amenities you deserve.

A Talk With Gay Playwright Paul Rudnick

New York Confidential

by Brandon Judell

Gay play writing (or plays by gays) has been making leaps and bounds lately, though if that is the same as progress can be argued. And should the term "progress" even be used with any of the arts? Who cares? What's fascinating right now is that the best reviewed American comedy of the last five years is Paul Rudnick's Jeffrey.

A laugh-riot comedy about dealing with AIDS and gay bashing that straights can relate to? Why not! Jeffrey, the title character, is an actor/waiter who decides that abstinence, come hell or high water, will be his guiding ethic. Man, whether in leather or chiffon, bemused or besotted, disguised as cowboy or Marine, will not be allowed to unzip his pants. As for that dreamy Steve, who's HIV positive, not a chance.

Of course, chastity doesn't come easy. There are those 12-step Sexual Compulsives Anonymous meetings led by a Louise Hay-type guru where one stud admits: "I love sex maybe because I have an erection 24 hours a day or maybe because my penis is 14 inches long." That stops that meeting in its tracks.

In Manhattan's Cornelia Street Cafe, a breakfast nook for trendy gay activists (Peter Staley) and Vanity Fair writers (Kevin Sessums), the B.A.R. cornered Paul Rudnick, the playwright (Poor Little Lambs, I Hate Hamlet); the novelist (Social Disease); and screenwriter (Sister Act when it was to star Bette Midler and the Addams Family movie and its sequel).

Brandon Judell: Are you shocked by the reception and press coverage that you and Jeffrey are receiving?

Paul Rudnick: Yes, even Time is doing a piece, and we'll see if it's nice. And there's been other magazine stuff. The subject matter has attracted so much interest, but I think there are more pieces about AIDS, and about sex and romance, and also about the multiple approaches that writers are taking to the whole deal now. It's exciting because there is this sort of spectrum. It's that kind of Zeitgeist thing. People are eager to learn how other people are coping. Or — especially now ten years along — how you adjust your perspective.

There's such a fear, especially in the gay community and in the political community, of burnout and of "Oh, my God! How many hospitals can you go to? How many marches can you attend before you lose either your anger or your compassion or your interest?"

And that seems so dangerous. But it's so inevitable that I think there's this sort of feeling of "Okay! Let's see what what he's doing about it." How can we fight the dis-

Nicholas, Glover, and Wray Hit the Mark

Star Quality

by Sando Counts

It's refreshing to be able and write an unequivocal rave about something after witnessing too many theatrical experiences that are lame, flawed, or off-base. Nicholas, Glover, and Wray's perfectly conceived and entirely satisfying cabaret show We Couldn't Say Good-Bye comes as a complete treat.

I'm also not one to get out of the city much (unless getting out involves a plane), so I was amazed how easy it was to slip out of town, over the bridge to Marin and right off the freeway to Joe LaCoco's Coconut Room for their show. And what a show.

It's interesting to see a trio of artists ten years later, as my last encounter with Nicholas, Glover, and Wray was in front of an adoring mob at a huge Galleria party at least that long ago. They were skinny, hard, and wore sharp military-style uniforms. The 1993 version is more comfortable, filled-in and looser, yet the trio is still the object of great audience affection.

High Style

Elegant, coifed, and in great voice, Julie Nicholas, Sheila Glover, and Willow Wray hit the stage singing one of their signature Boswell Sisters tunes. Tight vocals and close harmonies are made even richer by the personality and humor they infuse in their music.

In the second tune, "Be Mine Tonight," their voices glow in warm woodwind tones. Watching them, I get the same feeling I get watching Kronos Quartet (although their music is distinctly different), where the sense of history and respect among the mu-

OutThere

The Annals of Queerdom

by Robert Julian and Orland Outland

Coming to town soon to check out the local production of Dolls at the On Broadway Theatre: the heiress to the estate of Jacqueline Susann who isn't getting a dime from the held-over production. The heiress seems to have her own plans for a remake of the camp classic, and although she asked if there were any plans to take Dolls to New York, she didn't threaten legal action when she talked to the local producers. Our prediction: if she likes the show, she'll get behind it for a substantial piece of the action, if she hates it — she'll simply sue. Should we expect the original producers of The Brady Bunch to beat a path to the Alcazar?

Thanks, we'll call you. The OutThere casting contest for the part of Lestat in the upcoming film version of Anne Rice's novel Interview With The Vampire is over, now that word is out that Daniel Day-Lewis will be playing Lestat against Brad Pitt's Louis. The suggestions we received included Lewis, Alec Baldwin, Stephen Rea, and Jimmy White, who wrote to tell us that "It has been my dream since reading the book to play the part. I believe I'm perfect for the role: I'm blond, twentysomething, and I'm from New Orleans. (I'm also part vampire)." However, we heard about Day-Lewis' casting before we could forward Jimmy's request to Geffen Films. Actually, the Lewis/Pitt combination looks like a winner.

Coming in June: Orlando, a movie based on the Virginia Woolf novel, starring Quentin Crisp as Queen Elizabeth I and Tilda Swinton (a regular in Derek Jarman's films, including Edward II) as the male one day, female the next, title character.

Not coming in June, or any other month. We hear that Tina Brown's New Yorker has declined to publish an excerpt from Randy Shilts' upcoming book on gays in the military. However, they will not be asking Shilts to return his advance monies. Since Brown has never run from the subject of homosexuality, there must be some other reason for the magazine's position. What could it be?

If you want to know if those rumors about Chris Isaak are true, turn to page 46 of the March issue of San Francisco Focus — the picture at the top of the page, with Chris in white pants.

Welcome to the Hollywood Inquisition. We told you last week about Kristy McNichol snuggling with another girl in a bowling alley; now it seems Kristy's dumped her girlfriend and moved a man into her house, "in an attempt," says the Star, "to dump her gay image." Now that she's recanted her lesbianism under torture, a spokesman for NBC says that "it's possible Kristy could come back next season" to her former role on the sitcom (no, that was not a typo last week) Empty Nest.

Knots Landing star Claudia Lonow had a "lesbian affair" when she was a teenager. Actually, it was a one-night stand, but why should the Star worry about these little details? She was 16 at the time, and besides, "we were on qualudes." Remember when the excuse was, "gee, I was really drunk last night"?

But the latest in girl talk spews forth from Sharon Basic Instinct Stone in the current Vanity Fair. Stone confesses that she never really did the nasty with another lady, but she has dated other women. All things considered, Stone comes across as very smart, totally premeditated, and with all the charisma of Pat Nixon. Check out the cover photo if you don't believe us.

Musical queers? In the Star, Iman's first husband, basketball star Spencer Haywood, says their marriage ended when he caught her "in a passionate clinch with outrageous Grace Jones in a star-studded Paris disco." Iman is now married to David Bowie, whose first wife Angela once caught him in a passionate clinch with outrageous Mick Jagger in a star-studded London bedroom.

The Globe says that a new book reveals that Joan Rivers' new boyfriend, Marty Richards, is a "gay goldigger" who married

Chris Isaak — very large talent

Johnson & Johnson heiress Mary Lea for her money. Lea's son Hillary called Richards a "Broadway Jew fag." Boys named Hillary shouldn't throw stones. Well, of course Joan's going out with a gay man — a straight man would want sex. Oh, and one more thing. Richards inherited a $43 million estate when Mary Lea croaked — that can buy a lot of air time on QVC.

Retired porn star, Scott O'Hara, a frequent contributor to Diseased Pariah News, is taking his large talent elsewhere. This spring O'Hara strokes out on his own as editor and publisher of Steam, a quarterly about — what else — sex. It reviews bathhouses, sex clubs, and other sex venues with features like "My Favorite Glory Hole," written by The Itinerant Cockhound, appearing in the first issue. Advertising for the publication is being coordinated here in SF, but the editorial offices are back with O'Hara in Cazenovia, Wisconsin. Steam should start shooting up from your local newsstands next month.

Going, going, ... This month Christopher Street becomes a monthly once again, cutting back from its prior bi-monthly publication schedule. This sad decline was inevitable since Christopher Street's advertising base was, and still is, almost nonexistent. But even Andrew Holleran's outstanding regular contributions can't make up for stories like the current flatulent essay on SF politics by Charles Linebarger. He boasts, "Angela Alioto, barring a major scandal, will become mayor here in January 1996." Certainly Angela's rapier wit and piercing insight qualify her for the sobriquet "the Wendy Nelder of the '90s." But we can't decide if Angela's actually the reincarnation of Roseanne Roseannadana or Emily Litella. Which is it? We may have to wait for Spy to solve the dilemma with a "Separated at Birth" spread. ▼

Tips for Cultural Vultures

by Roberto Friedman

Whenever anyone complains about how limited the art scene is in San Francisco, they get no sympathy from this quarter. My great frustration as a critic is always falling behind in the museum and gallery shows I'd like to cover.

Our attention tends to gravitate to the large arts institutions, the de Young and the Modern, the Asian Art Museum or the Oakland Museum, where right now you can see a splendid show devoted to the Arts and Crafts Movement in California, "Living the Good Life." But in fact the Bay Area is blessed with a vibrant array of smaller museums, both established and newer, more adventure-some galleries. This week I offer encapsulated remarks on five shows currently on view in San Francisco. They range from 18th-century etching to performance art with a roomful of canaries. Perhaps what my remarks lose in brevity they make up for by hinting at the breadth of what's out there.

Burning Dreams:
Selected Works by Carlos Almaraz
Mexican Museum, Bldg. D, Fort Mason, through May 9

ings by Carlos Almaraz is a great enticement. Intensely colorful and thickly painted canvases like Burning Dreams (1984) and Dunce's Dream (1988) point up our loss since the Chicano artist's death from AIDS in 1989. This memorial retrospective includes a re-creation of Almaraz's studio, readings from his journals, and family photos. While you're down at Fort Mason, check out the San Francisco Craft & Folk Art Museum, SFMOMA Rental Gallery, and the Museo Italo Americano as well.

Los Caprichos —
Francisco Goya
Vorpel Gallery, 393 Grove, through April 30
Call 397-9200 for information

If your taste runs to elegant line drawing from an old master, the showing of 80 works on paper by Francisco Goya at Vorpel ought to appeal. Goya produced this series of satirical aquatints in the '90s — the 1790s, that is — when the French Revolution was in full swing. The artist risked censure and political pressure from the right when the suite of images was published because of their forthright depiction of hypocrisy and greed. Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose. The drawings, delightful examples of physical expression and piquant detail, are displayed in a luxurious installation typical of this gallery. It's a show for which most museums would trade their board of directors.

Peter Stackpole's 2nd Marine Division in Saipan, 1944

Taos Pictures —
Bill Jacobson
de Vera, 384 Hayes, through April 3
Call 861-8480 for information

Back in the here and now, gay New York photographer Bill Jacobson is showing ten monochrome prints of pueblo New Mexico at one of the twin de Vera galleries in newly chic Hayes Valley. The pictures, shot in Ektachrome and developed not through color processing but in sepia tones, are evocative, atmospheric landscapes of grave sites and adobe dwellings. Their mysterious mien is enhanced by Jacobson's intentionally blurred images; the viewer almost but not quite makes out a human figure, a passing dog. His pictures exude a sense of place, an air of mystery, perhaps even melancholy and longing. Just around the corner at de Vera's other gallery, 334 Gough, Emily McVarish is showing "Presswork," an exhibition of letter-pressed prints, collage and objects, wonderful if difficult work which fits right into the galleries' ambience of aesthetic delight.

Peter Stackpole
Scott Nichols Gallery, 49 Geary, through April 10
Call 788-4641 for information

Nichols is showing a splendid retrospective of vintage photographs, circa 1932-1952, from Peter Stackpole, one of Life magazine's original four photographers. Stackpole helped shape the world's perception of Hollywood in the '40s, and the selections here range from Greer Garson Training Her Dogs (1940) to a revelatory Alfred Hitchcock at Home (1946). The goods on display also include Elizabeth Taylor at Last Day of MGM High School and Diego Rivera painting a mural for the 1939 World's Fair, but the show is stolen by a series on the building of the Golden Gate Bridge (1936). You might also appreciate the portrait of the Second Marine Division (1944), nude and washing out their skivvies in a Saigon river, for more than aesthetic reasons. Stackpole, 79, lost his life's work in the Oakland fire of 1991. This show is testament to his American dream career.

Singing the World Into Existence —
Paul Panhuysen and the Canary Grand Band Exploratorium, 3601 Lyon, through April 30
Call 563-7337 for information

Then there's the twilight world of performance art, such as this interactive artwork, an interspecies collaboration between canaries and humans. The canaries flit about in a glass-walled chamber, tiny microphones disguised as eucalyptus buds on their perching trees. Dutch artist Paul Panhuysen creates harmonic drones by moving back and forth along "very long strings" (a few yards' worth) with resined fingers. Panhuysen claims that the instrument, his own invention, makes tones the canaries find most pleasing and that his feathered colleagues orchestrate their birdsong in response. At the inaugural performance, I was unconvinced that the birds were making conscious artistic choices, but they did sing their little hearts out, bless them. The artist stated his belief that he could only have created such an artwork at the unique museum that is the Exploratorium, and I'd have to agree.

Of course, I've only scratched the proverbial surface and must forgo many shows which are of interest. I wouldn't miss "Body Doubles," for instance, an exhibition of recent work by David Levinthal and Cindy Sherman on sexuality and representation of the body, at Ansel Adams Center through April 25 (495-7000). The final installment of the performance series by the Women's Art Project, "Feminism: What Kind?" takes place Saturday night with the Theory Girls' "If You Were Like a Heroine in a Country and Western Song" and Christine Tumblyn's "Paracritical Cannibalism II." An earlier performance in this series included a man putting his body through an unstrung tennis racket, so anything could happen at the Women's Building, 3543 18th St., March 27, 7:30 pm, $6.

Finally, tonight (March 25) brings the Benefit Auction for the LAB, a most innovative gallery space, supportive of much local talent. The auction is chock full of work donated by such hot West Coast artists as Raymond Pettibon, Jerome Caja, Lucy Puls, and Brett Reichman, and many more, all up for grabs at the bidding. I'll be there; call 346-4063 for information. ▼

Opposites Attract

by Eric Hellman

The Trocks are coming! The Trocks are coming! Those legendary, world-famous, gut-splitting dancers of Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo return to San Francisco's Opera House for a one-evening-only engagement on Sunday, April 4. It's an event that only the seriously humor-impaired, and politically incontinent, will want to miss.

But, if you're a young thing who needs some updating, or an old thing who has slipped precariously out-of-date, you may be asking, "Who are the Trocks and what, exactly, makes them so funny?"

Classical Travesty

Quite simply (and ridiculously), Ballets Trockadero is an all-male, en travesti ensemble of classical dance parodists. These boys-who-would-be-girls are also some very serious camp artists — masters of drag before it became the '90s rage. Further, and in one of those rare convergences of hostile forces in the universe, the Trocks present a show that delights ballet Philistines and ballet aficionados equally.

For the Philistines, Ballets Trockadero represents an opportunity to laugh at everything the "ballet-bores-me" crowd knows best: the seriousness of high art, the complicated poses, the stage names that no one can quite pronounce. And for the balletomanes, those individuals who love classical dance most, the Trocks present a evening of clever insider jokes, a type of satire that only the truly-initiated will ever understand. Low-brow meets high-brow — and everyone has a good time.

Although not seen in San Francisco since 1989, the Trocks have recently been revitalized by the enthusiasm, and considerable cash, provided by Japanese and South

Swans, Trockadero style

American audiences. In fact, the company is just returning to the U.S. following a six-week engagement in Buenos Aires where, apparently, drag ballet has a very BIG following.

Here, the highlight of the Trockadero engagement will be the "world" premiere of Star Spangled Ballerina (or, Bags with Flags). This new addition to the company repertoire promises to be an artful send-up of George Balanchine's Stars and Stripes Forever, one of the late choreographer's wittier "Americana" ballets, set to music by John Philip Sousa.

Other repertoire selections during the San Francisco visit will include the local premiere of Minkus Pas de Trois (where two very big "girls" are partnered by the Trocks' smallest guy); the group's now-classic parody of Anna Pavlova's The Dying Swan; the alternately beautiful and hilarious Trock version of Swan Lake, Act II (featuring the legendary Natasha Notgoudenoff in the role of Odette); Pas de Quatre, an ode to 19th century ballet the one-night-only visit by the boys in this gender-bent ballet showcasing four legendary ballerinas; and Go for Barocco, possibly the Trocks' most artful dance, a twisted version of Balanchine's complex, and at times confusing, neoclassic abstractions in Concerto Barocco.

Last Word

So, whether balletomane or Philistine in outlook, there will undoubtedly be something crude, something hysterical, something inspired in troupe.

Please, however, consider one final word to the wise. What the Trocks do is true parody — they enhance, rather than mock, the spirit of dance art. And, as such, attendees at the Trock performance should be prepared to spot potentially familiar faces in the audience, or even on the stage. In Argentina, for example, the international ballet star Julio Bocca was so enamored by the Trocks' satire that one night he claimed Prince Siegfried's role in the company's less-than-reverent version of Swan Lake. Mikhail Baryshnikov, where are you when we need you?

Film Grants

The Film Arts Foundation (FAF) Grants Program will award 22 grants totaling $59,000 to independent film and videomakers residing in the 10-county (San Francisco, Marin, Sonoma, Napa, Solano, Alameda, Contra Costa, San Mateo, Santa Clara, and Santa Cruz) Bay Area. To receive complete guidelines and application forms, send a SASE to FAF, 346 Ninth Street, Second Floor, San Francisco, CA 94103. Deadline for submissions is May 7, 1993. Awards will be announced in July.

The FAF Grants Program represents an effort by the San Francisco-based media arts center to support the creation of new film and video art, especially short, experimental works and projects that have little chance with traditional funding sources.

The program makes awards in three categories: short personal works, project development, and completion/distribution. Past recipients have included Marlon Riggs' Tongues Untied, Susana Munoz and Lourdes Portillo's Oscar-winning Las Madres, Timothy Hittle's animated The Potato Hunter, and Craig Baldwin's O No Coronado! ▼

It's Alive!

by Jerry Metzker

Not only do I recall watching The Brady Bunch after school and in the early evening, but I remember that my sister and I specifically reserved the half hour from 8 to 8:30 p.m. every Friday night for our special television friends.

Almost 20 years later I can still sing the entire Brady Bunch theme and I remember the thrill I felt when the muzak singers were replaced by the Brady kids themselves — a sextet that not only released an album, but graduated to their own Saturday morning cartoon. I have my favorite episodes; I can sometimes quote lines; and I always wondered why, in a house that big, all the kids were crammed into two bedrooms?

The creators/directors (sisters Jill and Faith Soloway) of The Real Live Brady Bunch never answer this question. What they do is take an actual episode of the series and put it on stage as accurately as they can, relying on memories and feelings to do the rest.

Pop Diva

In the episode I saw, Greg has written what he claims is the greatest pop song ever. He enlists the financial and vocal talents of his five siblings, and reserves recording studio space only to have pubescent Peter's voice begin to change. The Brady kids are frustrated and confused, but with a little love, and guidance from Mom, they resolve their dilemma by incorporating Peter's croaking voice into a new song and making the recording.

Kimmin O'Donnell's trim figure rivals that of Maureen McCormick's Marcia. Casually flipping all that long blonde hair, she poses as much as she stands. Carrie B. Aizley presents Jan's earnestness and guarded insecurity without the least bit of irony and was clearly an audience favorite. Patrick Towne plays Greg, Barry Williams playing Greg, and Barry Williams behind the scenes (check out Williams' Growing Up Brady for details) all at the same time. Biff Rickard and Nora Laudani as Bobby and Cindy with their obviously unnatural hair color and exaggerated gestures seem more authentic and true than their original counterparts.

This is not merely a rendering of a hit sit-com, play-acting, or even a theater production in its own right. This is something remarkably different, a fusion of the three and more.

The Real Live Brady Bunch is silly, wistful, precocious, wicked, ridiculous, irreverent, and hilarious. It is simultaneously a parody of its original and the real thing. What it is not is nonsense.

The cast of The Real Live Brady Bunch

For the enthusiastic, relatively youthful audience (in eight years of steady theater-going, I have never been in an audience so dominated by people my own age), watching the Brady's once again come to terms with one of their weekly dilemmas is far more than nostalgic.

Early Lessons

As children, we learned that when all is well with the Brady's, all is well with the world, but the irony is that when The Brady Bunch aired, all was not well with the world. Student protests, the Vietnam War, political assassinations, and inner city riots filled the headlines. How the Bradys managed to avoid such upheaval is a testament to how those middle-American young parents, raised on phony '50s family values, sought to protect their children from the big bad world.

The Real Live Brady Bunch exhorts that time, and somehow proffers a cathartic experience, a memory, and entertainment all at the same time. As much as I have learned and grown since those days, I still had a great time.

The early '70s music and Eric W. Waddell's The Real Live Game Show provide the appropriate warm-up for the show. Each episode runs two weeks, and next week The Real Live Brady Bunch presents "The Silver Platters" episode. In this one, Jan makes a huge and costly error, and the only way to correct it is for the kids to enter a talent contest. Get your tickets now. ▼

Gay freelance writer Wayne Hoffman is seeking submissions of personal essays, articles, or short fiction about coming out in the age of AIDS. He will be compiling a book this summer for publication, a collection of pieces about how young gay/bi men deal with HIV, safe sex, AIDS, anxiety, etc. Men 25 or younger who are "out" are asked to send in work for consideration by June 1, 1993, along with a cover letter and brief bio, to P.O. Box 26042, Arlington, VA 22215. Hoffman, a 22-year-old, HIV-negative, Jewish, gay urbanite, is especially interested in people with backgrounds different from his own — men of color, men from small towns, bisexual men, and HIV-positive men. ▼

Kitsch Delight

by Chad Jones

The Brady Bunch
It's a Sunshine Day: The Best of the Brady Bunch
 MCA Records

Talk about your guilty pleasures! Just when you thought the whole Brady Bunch wave of popularity had crested, in surfs It's a Sunshine Day: The Best of the Brady Bunch to hook you on the saccharine grooves of pre-fabricated pop.

With absolutely no redeeming musical value whatsoever, the Brady kids as a musical group are completely derivative, completely uninspired, and almost totally tuneless. That said, there's seldom been a CD so filled with kitschy delights.

For the uninitiated, the Bradys did indeed attempt to capitalize on the Partridge Family hit parade. After recording four albums and various solo projects, the Brady kids (mercifully) abandoned their respective recording careers.

But now we have, thanks to MCA Records, a permanent record of just how sick the twentysomething generation really is. Listening to Maureen "Marcia" McCormick's solo single "Truckin' Back to You," you realize the true inspiration for Belinda Carlisle. Listening to the Bradys warble through "American Pie," you finally understand why Don McLean's career never made it past 1974. And after hearing Susan "Cindy" Olsen lisp her way through "Frosty the Snowman," you find new meaning for the words "timeleth Chritmath clathic."

Even Florence "Carol/Mom" Henderson makes an appearance with a twangy country-western number "Born to Say Goodbye." It's an embarrassment of riches, or just an embarrassment.

The tunes you remember from the "musical" episodes are here in all their glory. Who can forget the image of the Silver Platters singing "It's a Sunshine Day" or "Keep On." And will we ever forget that special rite de passage moment when Peter's voice broke during "Time to Change"? Such musical memories.

Skeptics can scoff, but the price of the CD is justified if only to hear Greg and Marcia tempting each other with their delectable sweets — in a nice, not-related-by-blood, brother-sister kind of way — in "Candy (Sugar Shoppe)": "Wanna take you to my sugar shop, so come on/Wanna give you all the love I got, so come on/Candy kisses in the moonlight/Sugar shoppin' all through the night ... Candy, show you what I got now/Candy, cherry, lollipop now." What would Alice think?

Now we have a permanent record of just how sick the twenty-something
 really is.

For diehard fans only, this best-of collection is enough to make anyone over 35 grateful they missed out on the Brady brainwashing. But for us dazed twentysomethings, the Bradys have been torturing us for so long. Who knows when they'll disappear? We may even get our Woodstock yet. Picture it: VH-1 presents "The Brady Bunch: A Reunion Concert." Now that would really be a sunshine day. ▼

Negative Messages

Living in Secret
 by Cristina Salat; Bantam, $15

by Deborah Peifer

Bantam's press release describes Living in Secret, a book for middle-grade readers, as "a fast-paced suspense novel which addresses the contemporary issue of non-traditional families." Non-traditional families certainly abound in this not very suspenseful novel, but I'm not sure that the message about those families is a particularly positive one. Living in Secret also paints simultaneously an impossibly awful (the lesbians don't seem to like each other very much) and an impossibly idyllic (Amelia processes the possibility of being lesbian with no stress at all) view of lesbians and their children.

Amelia is an 11-year-old, unhappily living with her father and his new girlfriend. Amelia's mother, Claire, lost custody because she came out as a lesbian. Claire and her lover, Janey, decide to go underground with Amelia and start a new life with new identities in San Francisco.

The women have remarkably little difficulty renting a house and establishing themselves without any identification. The problem of school for the record-less Amelia is solved by hiring an at-home tutor. The finances of this non-traditional family are pretty healthy (perhaps that's the real non-traditional part), considering that they are able to move across country, rent a house, and furnish it without having jobs.

Amelia has no difficulty with her mother's lesbianism (how about that), but is more and more unhappy with the lies she must tell to keep their secret. And there is the constant concern that Dad will find them and put Claire and Janey in jail for kidnapping. While in San Francisco, Amelia meets new people and gets a look at lots of combinations of parental units and siblings, but no mixture has the lock on ideal.

Cristina Salat has little gift for dialogue; all of her characters sound alike, and their single tone is not interesting.

The picture of lesbian life in Living in Secret is one of stress and angst with little room for simple pleasures. Although the reason for the unhappiness is their having to live in secret, I suspect that a young reader would be likely

Labia and Leathermen

by Roberto Friedman

At first glance, Mark I. Chester and Tee A. Corinne seem an odd couple to be giving a slide show presentation together at SF Camerawork. Both photographers have had long careers of creating sexually explicit, transgressive portraiture, but just as the communities they call their own are markedly different, so is the content of their radical sex portraits.

Chester has made a name for himself by documenting the evolutions in South of Market sexuality since 1979. Typically his subjects, denizens of the leather and S/M scenes, are the centers of erotic tableaux: a nude young man under the boot of another, for example, or a chap tethered to his master's black-gloved hand by his ear.

Chester's earliest portraits were shadowy studies of men in bondage, the images often settled onto grainy film or startled into exposure by a straight-on flash bulb. The work's importance is not its composition but its courageousness, holding up to the light the aesthetics and visual cues of erotic pain. In his more recent work, Chester has refined his technique so that his men in bondage, clamps, and gags approach the clarity and beauty of classical pose. But it is the presence of the Bay Area radical sex community which comes through in Chester's work, not any aesthetic program.

Corinne's photography is, in a sense, even more explicit. For years she has been one of our foremost chroniclers of lesbian imagery, and Corinne has never shied away from the honest depiction of sexuality. The labia has been her landscape, in her 1975 collection of drawings, The Cunt Coloring Book; in her erotic fiction; and in her photos of women going down on women.

Candid Carnality

These solarized images of lesbian lovemaking have content which might be called pornographic, and so what if it is? Explicit scenes of carnality are presented with candor, love, and respect for the dignity of the women portrayed. The result is a body of work which is heart-based, non-exploitative, but no less interested in exploring taboos and trespassing the boundaries of convention.

Similarly, despite their overtly sensationalistic content, Chester's portraits are ultimately humane works, not only sex- but life-affirming. There is a tenderness to the best of them, even if the models are bound, gagged, tortured by clothespins or hot wax. The hard cocks omnipresent in Chester's images are signifiers that the bondage, the S/M play are consensual. His camera embraces not only bodybuilders and perfect leathermen, but all body types and ages.

Though you will look in vain for an erection in Corinne's oeuvre — and there's nary a sign of cunnilingus to be seen in Chester's output — the two artists share a commitment to the creation of honest imagery of their respective communities. Perhaps their upcoming double bill at SF Camerawork, "Sexual Photography and Homoerotic Imaging," isn't such an odd pairing after all. ▼

lang unplugged

This Sunday night at 10 p.m., k.d. lang gets unplugged on MTV. A special concert filmed in front of a small live audience allows lang to do what she does best. Since she came out last year, lang has gotten more relaxed and comfortable onstage. This time around, garbed in black with only acoustic accompaniment, she pulls out all the vocal stops. Her version of "Crying" could leave you doing just that.

Reaching for the Mythic in 'Olivier, Olivier'

The Return of Le Petit Frère

by Daniel Mangin

A mother loves her son, only too well, the way only a French mom can. His sister dotes on her precious brother almost as much. Father frets that the boy will turn faggot, but pleas for discipline go unheeded. Nine-year-old Olivier mysteriously disappears one day, while riding his bike to granny's house. The family falls apart.

Has he fled the suffocating Duvals? Is he a victim of foul play? Does a detective solve the case six years later when he "discovers" Olivier, or does he create a new problem? These questions motivate Agnieszka Holland's deliberately self-conscious Olivier, Olivier, a psychological melodrama inspired by a real-life occurrence. The director infuses her material with mythic overtones—a dollop of Little Red Riding Hood here, a deluge of Oedipus there (and everywhere).

Holland's previous credits as director include Europa, Europa and Angry Harvest. She also scripted Andrzej Wajda's Man of Iron and Danton. Her light touch with Europa, Europa provided a fresh perspective on the heavy, oft-examined subject of Nazi terror. In Olivier, Olivier, she narrows her focus to the dynamics of a decidedly dysfunctional French family.

Doomed Nirvana

A sense of doomed nirvana hovers over Olivier, Olivier's well-crafted opening scenes. Amber fields waft in the breeze, Olivier and sister Nadine play spy games and pull pranks on a farmhand, and mother Elisabeth gently caresses Olivier as she sings to him. These are images of rural life at its most idyllic, though signals surface almost immediately that the happy equilibrium can't last.

Holland's rendering of mood and place in the film's first third is masterful. For all the wide-open space, this is an oppressive environment. Sexually, things are way off-kilter. Olivier is such a repository for affections that should be spread more evenly around the family that the void his disappearance leaves for the remaining members becomes excruciating.

Everyone feels guilty. Mother because she didn't cling even tighter to her baby; sister because she was supposed to run the errand to grandmother's house but hid to avoid the duty; husband Serge partly because he participated in the bizarre rearing of Olivier, but also because Elisabeth has to blame someone and has chosen him.

A new psychological order develops in Olivier's absence, but upon his return as a 15-year-old, the family (despite the initial misgivings of Nadine) is only too willing to revert to its past perversity.

Play Backfires

Two aspects of Olivier, Olivier undermine the remainder of the film. In interviews, Holland requests that reviewers not reveal her "surprise ending," but about 40 minutes in, it seemed so obvious how the story was going to turn out that I assumed she was after the tension that can build in an audience when it does know. If that is the case, the play backfires. Guessing the truth (not difficult for French audiences familiar with the case) is worse than knowing the "secret" of The Crying Game.

Whether she tips her hand or not, there is a more serious drawback to Olivier, Olivier. For all her skill at building atmosphere, Holland shapes her narrative within the confines of some fairly shopworn psychological and mythological parameters. The word stereotype (as opposed to archetype) comes to mind regarding two of the characters, though one cannot delve into this further without breaching journalistic etiquette.

The main problem with Holland's narrative is that she doesn't let it breathe. To be sure, the prickly psychological terrain in which her characters reside mandates her claustrophobic approach—one that she leavens somewhat with ironic touches and a surrealism reminiscent of David Lynch. The weak link is the material, which doesn't live up to Holland's expectations for it. What seems at first like precise construction begins to feel strained after an hour or so (right about the time Olivier No. 2 sings "The House of the Rising Sun" at a family party).

Nadine (Marina Golovine) and the teenaged Olivier (Gregoire Cloin)

Late in the film the opera Boris Godunov, another true-life tale about the mysterious return of a long-lost soul, plays on the TV. It's another (and by now unnecessary) bit of self-referencing that more than anything else underscores the lack of sweep to the proceedings in Olivier, Olivier. The story here may parallel the archetypal, but unlike Godunov or even Lynch's Blue Velvet, the actual connection to the mythic (or the fairy tale) is tenuous.

Although it stumbles at a few crucial moments, Olivier, Olivier is by no means a failure. Much of it works well, particularly the transformations Nadine undergoes as the situation around her evolves.

That all the artistry doesn't add up to much is an unhappy result, but not a fatal one. Perhaps Freudian psychodrama is too small an arena for Holland, the best of whose work distributed widely in this country deals with interpersonal interactions set against the larger context of world politics. ▼

It's No Secret

Behind the Oscar: The Secret History of the Academy Awards
by Anthony Holden; Simon and Schuster, $25

by Daniel Mangin

I'm told that editors at major publishers keep lists of celebrities and topics for which there is an almost guaranteed market, no matter how repetitive the information. Elvis, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor (the former King Edward VIII and his wife), and the Civil War are among the supposedly sure-fire subjects.

Movie books also sell steadily, which is probably

Author Anthony Holden

why every few years out pops another book on the Academy Awards. The latest entry, Behind the Oscar, is subtitled "The Secret History of the Academy Awards." There are precious few secrets contained within, so few that its dust jacket hasn't a one with which to tease potential purchasers.

Among the "secrets" Behind the Oscar reveals are the "real" reason behind Elizabeth Taylor's award for Butterfield 8; what led George C. Scott to decline his award for Patton; and that the nude streaker at the March 1974 ceremony was probably a publicity stunt masterminded by the show's producers.

What? You've already read about these, in Oscar Dearest, And the Winner Is... and countless other tomes? Well, thousands of potential book buyers out there haven't, and movie buffs who have will doubtless add this to their collections anyway. So why not trot out all the old stories once more as padding for the few updates to the last rehashing?

Love-Hate Relationship

The thesis of Behind the Oscar is that movieland talents have a love-hate relationship with Hollywood's highest accolade. They know that the voting is often rigged and that sentiment and politics often outweigh actual merit. Some even believe that competition between artists is unseemly.

Eventually, though, most of them come around: the whole ritual may be fraudulent as hell, but it's the only game in town. The financial, artistic, and personal benefits of an award are just too enormous — unless like Julie Andrews, Gig Young, or Cliff Robertson, you fall victim to the "Oscar jinx."

The whole
Oscar ritual may be fraudulent as hell, but it's
in town.

Behind the Oscar's chief value is its copious (and until next week) up-to-date statistics, which take up 142 pages at the back of the book. Oscar "trivialists," as Holden dubs them, track stats like baseball enthusiasts. Data, such as the number of times a person comes away empty-handed after receiving nominations for both Best Actress and Best Supporting Actress, are the awards' equivalent of info on a player's slugging percentage with men on second or third base with two out in the bottom of the ninth. Besides stocking the appendices with minutiae, Holden incessantly interrupts an already meandering narrative with still more.

The emphasis on trivia leads to curious inconsistencies. If it is necessary to relate yet again the Marlon Brando/Sacheen Littlefeather incident (the actor sent Littlefeather to collect his award and deliver a speech on the maltreatment of Native Americans), why dismiss her as "a phony," when the truth about her heritage and motives is more complex? And why neglect to include her in the lengthy index though she's mentioned on several pages?

Miramax Maneuvers

The most interesting chapters of Behind the Oscar cover the last three awards ceremonies. "Left Foot Forward," which opens the book, outlines Miramax's clever positioning of Daniel Day-Lewis for the 1989 Best Actor award for My Left Foot. This included a wheelchair-accessible screening attended by the usually reclusive Day-Lewis at the Hart Senate Building in Washington and some behind-the-scenes maneuvering on the star's behalf in Los Angeles.

The Day-Lewis example is instructive. Up against Kenneth Branagh in Henry V, Tom Cruise in Born on the Fourth of July, Morgan Freeman in Driving Miss Daisy, and Robin Williams in Dead Poets Society, Day-Lewis may well have turned in the best performance among those nominated. Holden's research makes it clear that turning in the best performance is the least of the requirements for winning an Oscar. As Alan Ladd, Judy Garland, and countless other actors learned the hard way, if your studio or publicist (or both) isn't pulling for you, your chances in the top categories are almost nil.

"Who's Afraid of Dancing With Wolves?" and "Silence Is Golden" close the book with detailed accounts of the events leading up to the 1990 and 1991 Academy Awards. Kevin Costner, Holden notes, may be a talented fellow, but his college degree in marketing is perhaps as important an element to his success as any artistic training he's had.

"Silence Is Golden" includes mention of lesbian/gay protests of Silence of the Lambs, Basic Instinct and JFK and the threat by Queer Nation to disrupt the Oscar ceremony in March 1992. QN, Holden concludes, "succeeded only in raising the noise level, as a handful of some five hundred protesters were arrested by police careful to wear gloves."

Ah, Hollywood, where the police are as enlightened as the producers. ▼

Editor's Note: To celebrate the Academy Awards as well as raise funds for the AIDS Emergency Fund, Continuum HIV Day Services, and the Gay Asian Pacific Alliance (GAPA) Community HIV Project, the Academy of Friends is holding their 1993 Oscar Night Gala, Monday, March 29, at the San Francisco Fashion Center, starting at 5:30 p.m. Tickets are $100, $125 at the door. ### Past Life Recall

by Dianne Aaronson

I was asked recently if I "believe" in past lives. Answering in the affirmative, I explained that "belief" was a strange word for me to use in that context. It's similar to being asked if I believe I had once been a child or gone to elementary school. When one has seemingly concrete memories to substantiate the experience (erroneous or not), it is simply a matter of remembering. How vivid your powers of recall are determines the depth of that particular memory. Childhood, and certainly infancy, may represent just a dim blur to many individuals. Often large chunks of the sequence may have been blotted out from conscious memory, no longer readily accessible. Yet few of us doubt that we were once infants, progressed to childhood, adolescence, and then adulthood, though we may no longer be able to conjure up even one memory of third grade or our first day in high school.

Those of us who have recalled one or many of our past lives are in a similar position. While some of the memories may be sketchy and the sequence of lives may not be complete, we do not doubt the existence of these additional lifetimes.

Unfortunately, doubt does rear its ugly little head for many as they struggle to remember little tidbits that slowly piece together like a jigsaw puzzle. Though skepticism is quite healthy (in moderation), it seems that in this culture we have been taught to mistrust our memories. Ask any individual who has tried to come to terms with memories of abuse. Without the help of a therapist or other supportive individual who can reinforce and validate these memories, they are often dismissed as the products of an overactive imagination. And while on the surface abuse memories and past life recall have nothing in common but the potential for disbelief, on a deeper level there is another common thread: these experiences and the memory of them (conscious or not) have helped shape who we are today.

Admittedly, at times a memory has been repressed, hidden from our conscious awareness, for good reason. However, it is pretty hard to force a memory to the surface before an individual is ready to deal with it. Therefore, in most cases, I'm in favor of exploring our memories, whether they be a product of this life or a previous one.

Unexpected Phenomenon

Past life recall was brought to the attention of mainstream Western culture by, of all people, psychoanalysts. A few therapists happened upon this phenomenon quite unexpectedly while regressing patients under hypnosis. The goal was a return to an earlier part of the patients' present life, but at times, the regression, and the memories that emerged, came out of an earlier time.

The first well-known documented case of this sort of which I am aware (circa the 1950s) is the life in Ireland of an individual named Bridey Murphy, remembered by a young woman who'd been regressed by her doctor. More recently, a psychiatrist named Dr. Helen Wambach had similar experiences with hypnotically regressed patients. These experiences so fascinated her that she turned her life's work toward research in this field.

Exploring
become a problem if the person involved is looking for an escape from reality or is hoping the grass is greener on
side.

Wambach is still writing and researching, and probably continues to offer seminars around the country which she in turn uses as data for future research. At a seminar of hers which I attended approximately ten years ago, she used group hypnosis to bring people back to certain periods of history so that they might experience a lifetime if they'd lived during that particular era. She also brought us forward to two future lives (2100 and 2300) as she had also begun to research what "happened" then. (It is a theory of many who dabble in past life research that time is simultaneous and, therefore, all of our lives are happening at the same time. If so, it stands to reason that memories of the "future" are as available to us as those of the "past.")

I believe that the more we understand about ourselves, our history, the experiences that form each of our unique lives, the more likely we all are to achieve optimum health. Past life recall represents to me one more alternative step toward a healthy life. Granted, it is not of interest to everybody, just as delving into our present-day psyches is not appealing to everyone.

Therapeutic Tool

For those of you with a natural curiosity for the unknown, however, past life recall has the potential to become a rewarding therapeutic tool. If our experiences have helped mold who we are today, then it stands to reason that integrating these experiences through awareness and understanding can make for a healthier individual.

For instance, Dick Sutphen

Of Barn Burners and Blowouts

by Nancy Boutilier

It was feast or famine in the Gay Softball League this week (March 21), as games seemed to fall into one of two categories: the barn burner or the blowout.

Reminiscent of last week's late inning rally, the Pendulum Bucs scored five runs in the bottom of the sixth to secure a one-run victory over the Cinch Spurs, 9-8.

Paced by Amy Alexander's double, Cafe Too scored three in the top of the sixth to tie the Metro at four, but Kim's single in the bottom of the seventh sent Karla home with the winning run, as the Metro rallied for the win, 5-4.

With the score tied at two through much of the game, Russ Smith's home-run shot helped put Viacom up by four runs in the top of the sixth. The Cubs then answered with five of their own and hung on to their one-run lead in the seventh to seal the victory at 7-6.

The feast also came in the sixth inning for Leticia's as a Cathy Sutton two-run homer sparked a nine-run rally that lifted Leticia's over Sabin Chiropractic, 11-4.

A two-run rally in the bottom of the seventh paced by Danny Moore's hitting fell one run short of the three-run lead that Castro Village Pharmacy had built up, as the Pharmacy edged out the Pilsner Penguins, 8-6.

Cameron Bowen scored three in three trips to the plate, helping the Pilsner Prism mount a lead that Group Therapy couldn't overcome. GT left runners stranded in the seventh inning, as the Prism held, 7-4.

Hitting three-for-three and scoring three runs apiece for Pier 50/Olive Oil's were Jill Taylor and Diane Dixie, as Bloody Mary's watched an early 8-0 lead melt away to a 14-10 victory for the Pier.

With a six-run rally in the seventh inning, Fan Asylum Rock Dogs beat the SF AIDS Foundation, 12-6.

The Pendulum Pirates collected three runs in the first, only to be shut out by Rita's for the rest of the game. Meanwhile, Rita's racked up 15 runs on 20 hits, including a Peter Wieser homer, for the 15-3 win.

Dottie's Beats Best

Dottie's cashed in for six in the second on a Kaupas-Fowler double trouble and a Lorenzen triple. Dottie's coasted to an 18-4 triumph over Uncle Bert's Best as Steve Berger and Tom Harlin doubles helped the Best to score their four.

The Huffin Puffins scored too little too late, as the Stud Puppies hoarded nine runs in the first inning and held the Puffins scoreless until the fourth, when Angelo Maggio cashed in on a triple. Every Puppy scored as Scott Wilbanks and Ed Adams unleashed four-baggers in the Stud's 24-5 triumph.

Wayne Alexander hit two-for-two and scored the only

Tracksters Open 10th Season

The River City Spring Invitational is the 1993 season opener for the San Francisco Track and Field Club, and it takes place this Saturday at Sacramento State University.

This year marks the 10th anniversary for the SFTFC and veteran members Frank Demby, Valerie Scott, Rick Thoman, Nancy Frost, Lefe Fowler, Michele Lewis and Rob Lenderink will be joined by newcomers Eddie Hall, Carlos Ferreira and Reggie Snowden at the Sacramento meet.

"We're excited about this season," commented team co-coach Frank Demby. "We've come a long way as a club, and with the addition of our newest members the team is really feeling revitalized."

Demby said this first meet will be used to "test the water" and that the major goal is to get ready for next year's Gay Games in New York.

"There's always a feeling of anxiety prior to the first meet, no matter how many years you've been competing," Demby said. "But this meet will provide an opportunity to gauge where we're at physically and what we need to work on in order to improve this season and for the Gay Games in '94."

Slow Build

The team is building up to the games slowly but surely. They hope that by gradually increasing physical strength and awareness, they'll be able to avoid the plague of injuries that reduced the team to just two active members by the end of last season.

Demby said that those interested in competing in track and field at next year's Gay Games should come out and train with the team this year. "With little over a year until the Games, there's not a lot of time to get in top condition if you want to get in shape easily and avoid injuries," Demby noted. "This is the perfect time to come out and train at your own pace, get a little competition under your belt, and be prepared for a peak performance next June."

The SFTFC wants to take as large a contingency as possible to the games and everyone, regardless of experience, is welcome to come out and train with the team. "We want to make as great an impact in New York as we did at the previous three Gay Games," he said. "But we need more participants, especially women, in all age groups."

To help defray the costs of participating at Gay Games IV, the San Francisco Track and Field Club is offering a hotel/travel package to anyone interested. Proceeds from booking with the SFTFC will benefit the Club. Individuals or groups booking 25 rooms or more can receive an additional bonus off the package price.

The SFTFC holds practice sessions every Tuesday and Thursday night at 6 p.m., and Sunday mornings at 10 a.m. All workouts are held at the Kezar Stadium track near Golden Gate Park in San Francisco. For more information regarding the Club or their Gay Games travel/housing package, call (415) 550-7966. ▼

Recall

phen has authored books focusing on understanding relationships through past lives. There are certain theories which suggest that we travel with the same group of individuals through various lifetimes, though our relation to them may vary. If you happen to agree with this, and also subscribe to the idea that life is basically a large classroom, then it is easy to see how certain individuals in our lives are here (and perhaps were there) to help provide us with lessons and learning tools (some pleasant, some possibly not, but lessons just the same). It is also believed by some that certain health problems may have a history older than our present lifetime.

Exploring past lives can become a problem if the person involved is looking for an escape from reality or is hoping the grass is greener on the other side. Regarding this subject, a theologian on German television recently suggested that if your life is currently boring and mundane, do not expect that your previous lives were filled with magic, princes, and princesses. A life is just a life. However, when viewed as a therapeutic tool, past life exploration can certainly help enhance your understanding and acceptance of your present reality.

In the Bay Area, the opportunity to participate in past life therapies abounds. The most reliable source for therapists in this area is Common Ground, published quarterly and found at many Bay Area locations. In addition, reading material is plentiful. A good start would be anything authored by Dr. Helen Wambach or Dick Sutphen. A used bookstore is a great source for this type of reading. ▼

Cockstar run as Rolo romped for 22 runs, with Gary Edde scoring four of his own and Mark Schultz and Chuck Mears collecting five RBIs apiece in the 22-1 Rolo victory.

When it rains, it pours, and The Cafe reign continued as Terri "To the Tree" Taylor, Maureen "Through the Fence" Hogan, and Mares "Still the Fastest Around" Reynoso cranked home runs for the defending Gay World Series Champions as The Cafe blanked Friend & Friedman, 33-0. Pitcher Julie Wiget had two of her team's four hits for F&F.

Sparked by Donald Wilson's leadoff homer in the first, the Rawhide jumped out to an early lead. But Jerry Gonzales collected five RBIs as he hit the cycle, pacing the Phone Booth in a 22-6 victory cruise.

The Edge packed away Rossi Meats/LYRIC, 22-0.

Sunday's Games

Bearons Blowing Away Division II

After five weeks of spring season action, the Red Barons have risen to the league lead and have proven thoroughly dominant in Division II action.

The Bearons, led by Captain Mark Miller at 8-2, face their toughest test of this young season in their visit to the Pilsner this week, home of the second-ranked Penguins. Third in this division is UB Gone from Uncle Bert's.

The Pilsner Puppies suffered their first defeat in a 7-9 upset vs. Bear Et Al., the fifth-ranked team in Division I. Mo Better Studs are right on the Puppies' heels, just two games back at 40-24. Third place here belongs to Cinch It Up, with Cathy Sutton off to an 11-3 start.

International Borders remain atop Division III, with both Marlena's overpassers and Cinchpenders hot on the trail of the leaders.

Division IV teams are looking forward to the upcoming inter-divisional action, which this group should dominate. Border Patrol remains in the lead after a big 11-5 win over Transfer Ballbusters. They visit Tien Fu-Lishness this week in a major test for both teams. Sanctuary Much keeps plugging away and holds third place with a four-game cushion. This division could field six playoff teams.

Big Tourney at South Beach

A number of league players participated in South Beach Billiards' second annual Amateur 8-Ball Championship last weekend, including Rick Bradford, Toni Macante, Luby Pelletier, and E. Z. Both Wally Sutherland and Lauren Ward have advanced to the final eight and will compete next Sunday starting at noon. A first prize of $1,000 is up for grabs. Dial JOE-POOL for SFPA information. ▼

Omaha's Amy Marie Meek Is International Ms. Leather '93

For the second time in less than six months, a leather individual from Omaha, Nebraska, took a major leather title. This time it was 26-year-old Amy Marie Meek, Ms. Leather Nebraska '92, who won out over eight other contestants at the Seventh Annual International Ms. Leather contest last Saturday afternoon, March 20, at Club Townsend.

The first runner-up was Queen Cougar, Ms. SF Leather '93, also Ms. Headquarters Leather '93. The second runner-up was Donna Shrout of San Francisco, Ms. Northern California Leather '93.

IMs.L '93 was a sterling event, thanks to a lot of volunteers and the superior production expertise of Audrey Joseph. The whole affair began only a few minutes after the 1530 starting time and was a show-stopper from beginning to end. Too bad some of the Mr. Drummer aspirants weren't around; they could have learned a lot from the fantasies presented by the women. The entire production was dedicated to Patrick Toner, IML 1985, an instrumental force in the women's leather title concept from the beginning. Audrey Joseph's poignant dedication speech left only a few dry eyes in the room.

Former IMs.L. Shan Carr, resplendent in a green velvet gown, emceed the first half with appropriate comedic remarks and anecdotes, and Leather Daddy Irwin Kane emceed the second half, his booming, resonant voice the epitome of decorum and a "first" for this particular leather event. A male emcee at IMs.L.? Flawless.

Judges Pam Meyers, Ruth Marks, Tova Seawall, Wickie Stamps and outgoing IMs.L. Blair were hard-pressed, considering the superior array of contestants. Lenny Broberg was the alternate judge and, as such, sat in on the judging throughout. He said he was really impressed by the quality of this year's contestants.

The opening number, featuring Skeeter Wildman and the fabulous Rainbeau, was the first of a non-stop bonanza of imaginative choreography, outer space and Stone Age tableaux, with driving background music and hot lighting. From Queen Cougar's 10-member fantasy singing "live" to Ms. Southbay Leather Heidi Bayer's medieval sword play, it was an afternoon of gasping and standing ovations. Blair's farewell fantasy and speech were stirring, informative and full of thanks for all the support she received. Sacramento's Kim Wallace was another show-stopper in the second-half opening. What verve. What talent. Kim the divine.

With her extensive leather/SM activism, the obvious high scoring in the personal interview and a socko fantasy (liberating imprisoned leather men and women from a demented, ill-informed justice system). Amy, who has matching brown eyes and hair, managed to score high and win the title. Her good friend Intl. Mr. Drummer Emerson Briney (also from Omaha) is bursting with pride in the knowledge that leather pride exists in mid-America as well as on both coasts.

Amy is also affiliated with the Imperial Court of Nebraska as a "lord," a member of the NLA National Council and on the steering committees for the March on Washington and Queer Nation, Nebraska. She serves on local boards as the leather liaison and has had input on Pride Week committees for seven years. When not involved with all that, she manages to involve herself in political activism, music, body modification, painting and SM education. We look forward to a great year with Amy as IMs.L '93.

The local men's leather title game played out again here last Thursday, March 18, as the third and final heat of Mr. SF-Eagle got under way. Judges Lenny Broberg, Evan Zapata and Jerry Roberts picked Gary Birdsell as the winner of the third heat, with Rainbeau, darling of the leather community and many others, accepts the Cable Car Award for Outstanding Contribution Women's Community.

Vince Black the runner-up. That makes five contestants for the Eagle title tonight, Thursday, March 25. The action begins promptly at 2100 (9 p.m.) with cruisewear, jock and leather image/speech segments on the patio stage interspersed with entertainment. After the winner is announced, all the candidates for Mr. SF Leather (on April 3 and tickets are going fast!) will be presented. Don't miss it!

On Friday, March 19, nine contestants turned out for the Mr. Edge Leather contest emceed hilariously by Danny Williams. Judges Andy Anderson, Philip Rubin and the outgoing Mr. Edge Ed Brick didn't have an easy time of it. The Edge was packed wall-to-wall and out-of-town leather title winners were all over the place. They raised tons of money for the beneficiaries, and a few minutes after midnight, the handsome Tony Amato was announced as Mr. Edge Leather 1993. The first runner-up was Sid Torres, and the second runner-up was Michael Travino. Tony will compete in the Mr. SF Leather contest.

Later on Saturday night, the Cable Car Awards and Show was another glittering affair for nominees and spectators with the who's who of the community gathered to honor each other. While the voting was open to non-ticket buyers from 1400-1600, there were still complaints that the open voting was not long enough. Lots of other dialogue accompanied that complaint, but why go into it here? Hey, write a letter to the editor! Congratulations to Terry Thompson and the SF Eagle for their special award, the fabulous Rainbeau, the B.A.R.'s Dennis Conkin (for journalist of the year) and SMMILE for the Folsom Street Fair. And which emcee quipped: "Finally, a leather event wins an award!"?

Gail Wilson of City Swing won for entertainer of the year, but not before last year's winner Marga Gomez went through a too-brief comedy routine about her experiences when she won last year.

Sunday, the GDIs hosted the Eagle's beer/soda bust with another sellout crowd. Corned beef and cabbage was served up and keg after keg of beer with heavenly bodies

A Date With Oscar

Make a date on Monday, March 29, for the Academy Awards Fixed Price Buffet at The Gate (Pine and Jones) — fun, champagne, prizes. Come early and stay late. Reservations (885-2852) are required for dining room seating, which begins at 5:30 p.m. Ballots are $1; winner takes all. Sounds like fun.

Thank you, Philip Murphy, for the lovely St. Paddy's Day flowers you sent to Gilmore's.

And thanks to all the wonderful people who made donations to the Godfather Service Fund in Dick Petroff's name. Over $700 was raised.

Did you know that the New Eagle Creek Saloon, open at noon every day, is San Francisco's only black-owned gay bar?

Rumor has it that our popular Empress Jackie of Marlena's has secured the City Hall Rotunda for her investiture. Great!

Le Salon on Polk Street certainly has some of the best porno films in the city, and the clerks are very good at helping you find exactly what you want. So give them a try.

Incidentally, don't miss porn star Danny Sommers at the Nob Hill (729 Bush). He's

A happy belated birthday (March 23) to Dolly Dale. Congratulations to T. J. Buckley of Fickle Fox fame, who will be celebrating his 70th March 31.

Randy Allen's "P.S. Bette Davis" opens at the Plush Room at the York Hotel April 8. Make your reservations (885-2800) early, as I understand that Randy is fabulous and shouldn't be missed.

If you've never seen the Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo, do so on Sunday, April 4, at 8 p.m. at the Opera House — truly hilarious. I have seen them twice and want to go again.

Also on April 4, from noon to 4 p.m., Alvin's on Geary will be having the Eighth Annual Easter Brunch Benefit by Hal Gage for the Tenderloin Tessie Easter Dinner Program. $3.

On April 11, 1-4 p.m., there will be a free Easter dinner at the St. Paulus Church (950 Gough). To donate call Empress Phyllis at 703-0345 or Bobby Pace at 775-3260. It's a worthy cause.

I shall be working at Gilmore's on Easter Sunday, and Dennis Tyler will be doing a surprise Easter egg coloring. And of course that night Corey will have a few surprises of his own. Don't miss it!

"Hi" to Wes, a great T-shirt maker and a great guy.

A happy birthday greeting to my publisher, Bob Ross, whose birthday is April 2. Would you believe I have known him since he was 34?

Memo to Steve Suss of the Embers/Avenue in Portland: Yes, I still haven't had a drink and am looking forward to the vacation in Phoenix. Hi, Kelley. ▼

Affairs to Remember

Thursday, March 25: Picking Mr. SF-Eagle Leather tonight promptly at 2100 with entertainment. All the contestants for Mr. SF-Leather will be on hand for the finale of this the final bar contest. Be there!

Friday, March 26: IML Lenny Broberg and IMs.L '92 Blair travel to Indianapolis for the Mr. Indiana Leather contest, probably their last official act together. Whatta team!

Saturday, March 27: Mr. Watering Hole Richard Faust presents the Ripped & Torn (jeans) Contest ($50 cash prize) and beer/soda bust for $6 at the SF-Eagle from 2000-2300 to benefit LYRIC. A 50/50 raffle and judges Irwin Kane, Andy Anderson, Queen Cougar and Lupe Rosenbaum will examine the holes. Apps available at the bar up to starting time.

Leather Daddy and Daddy's Boy contest at the Wreck Room, 2513 Broadway, in Sacramento tonight at 2130 with fantasy presentations and a raffle. Randy Carlyle of the SLA is putting this one on; contact him at (916) 863-3398.

Sunday, March 28: Positive Resource hosts the beer/soda bust today at the Eagle. Lots of cruising if nothing else. They didn't bother to send a press release with details. Play by e-a-r.

Wednesday, March 31: The 1994 Great Buns Calendar competition kicks off tonight at the Eagle, produced by Vern Stewart and with guest emcees and guest judges for Mr. January '94 Great Buns. Winner gets $75. Looking for the best buns for Mr. March '94 for the 1994 Buns to Boots Calendar at the Watering Hole at 2130.

Thursday, April 1: April Fools' Day — free beer and cocktails all over town — NOT! Don't take any wooden nickels, leaky condoms or rely on colored hankies in the right or left pockets.

The Eagle's bare chest calendar contests resume tonight at 2130, and they're looking for Mr. May '94. The winner gets $100 and an inquisition that makes the Spanish clerics look vanilla. Be there!

The "Sexual Photography and Homoerotic Imaging" show by Mark I. Chester and Tee A. Corinne opens tonight at 2000 at SF Camerawork, 70 12th St. (between Market and Mission streets). Sexually taboo images by both photographers (and she's a writer as well). Exploring radical sex and kinky acts (men and women), both are considered to be on the cutting edge in this genre. Admission is $3 for students and members and $5 for the general public. A "don't-miss" exploration. For more info, call 621-1001.

Saturday, April 3: Mr. Leather of SF contest and show at the California Club (Clay St. at Van Ness Ave.). Tickets, which are going fast, are available at Mercury Mail Order, Mister S and S2 and SF-Eagle. You can call 626-3556 to charge to your Visa, Mastercard or American Express. Do it today!

Other Important Dates: The Eagle celebrates its 12th anniversary April 19 (commemorative pin night), April 20 (T-shirt night) and April 21 (buffet dinner and show). Make your plans now!

The Golden Dildeux Awards have been revived and will be presented on Saturday, July 10, at the Eagle. Billed as the "world's only sex awards," many of you men and women could be nominated in the 20 categories. Always a riot. Ballots only a dollar each to benefit the AIDS Emergency Fund. Plan now to meet the winners of the Dick of Death category, Best Male Performance by a Female Impersonator, Tea Room Commando, Chicken Hawk of the Year, Golden Shower Queen, Golden Fist and Best Performance in a Three-Way. No-holds barred! ▼

To Our Valued Wet Customers

There has been a great deal of rumor about the levels of Nonoxynol-9 in Wet Personal Lubricant. In early 1992, we discovered our former manufacturer was not formulating the Wet to it's proper ingredient levels. This was causing the product to turn watery. On February 19, 1992 we voluntarily recalled Wet from all U.S. and international retail outlets and distributors. Since switching to our new quality laboratory, Lot No. 1148 and above has contained a minimum of 0.1%. We based that percentage on the report "The use of spermicide containing Nonoxynol-9 in the prevention of HIV infection." This report was authored by Kristina D. Bird, Information Officer with the National HIV Prevention Information Service. Page 792 of that report stated "In products available for use a minimum concentration of 0.1% - 1% has been recommended." That report also discusses the many problems of sensitivity associated with the use of Nonoxynol-9. For that reason, we chose to use the percentage on the lower end of the recommended range. The use of Nonoxynol-9 was first recommended based on a test tube study (in vitro) with HIV. There are many ingredients which kill the virus in the test tube. Many do not have the same effect in humans. The only human study (in vivo) was done in Africa using two groups of prostitutes. It showed the Nonoxynol-9 to be less effective against HIV in the group using it, than the group that did not! 45% of the group using the Nonoxynol-9 became infected with HIV and 36% of the group who were not using the Nonoxynol-9 became infected. There was also a threefold increase in genital irritation and ulcers among the women, conditions which may increase the danger of HIV infection. Because of the many telephone calls and letters requesting that we raise the level of Nonoxynol-9 in Wet Personal Lubricant, we have no choice but to meet those requests. Effective immediately with lot number 1170, Wet will contain 1% Nonoxynol-9. We must stress that Wet Personal Lubricant is only a cosmetic and not a drug. We do not make any therapeutic claim as to the use of Nonoxynol-9. It is only listed as a product ingredient. We add this ingredient only because of customer demand. For those who find it irritating or bitter in taste, we recommend Comfort Personal Lubricant which does not contain any Nonoxynol-9, but otherwise is the same long lasting formula as the Wet.

Wet and Comfort Personal Lubricants are sold throughout the world and are the most popular brands among gay men and lesbians. Dynamic Concepts donates over $250,000 per year to AIDS Organizations world wide. We are committed to providing the highest quality personal lubricants on the market. If you have any questions please write us at P.O. Box 8069, Van Nuys, CA 91409.

ease? How can we fight apathy? How can we fight just the sheer tidal wave of "Oh, my God!"

Sometimes you go through those awful, deceptive lulls where you suddenly don't know anyone who's sick or you don't know anyone who's dead for, say, a month, and you have this feeling of "Oh, maybe the figures have changed." Maybe there really is some sort of downswing at this point. Then suddenly one day it's five people, and then the next day it's four more, and you realize nothing's changed at all. What do you do?

That's one of the things Jeffrey's about. What do you do when AIDS becomes so much a part of your life? I think it's changed the way everybody thinks about death and hospitals and disease. When funerals are no longer special occasions but part of the daily calendar. There's been a lot of press attention on that level.

But one of the reasons I wrote the play was those sort of social details when memorials become cocktail events, which can be very positive and certainly a much more inventive and personal way of dealing with AIDS. Suddenly you're faced with, "Are you going to John's?" "No, oh God, I have to go to Jimmy's." And there's conflict and there's overlapping. And it gets ridiculous and gets funny, and it gets touching and just insane.

Actually, one of the few good things about AIDS is that I'm much more comfortable about hospitals. I used to just have to scream out my terror: "Ahhh!" I hated following the orange lines to get to the orange wing and stuff. Now I have this sort of nonchalance where I treat a hospital as if it's Lord and Taylor's... or a second home and you know where everything is. But anyway, what was this in response to?

I think I originally asked if you would date anyone who uses steroids.

It depends on their effect. [Laughs heartily] Would you date anyone in a tight T-shirt? Sure.

Were you nervous about the play being so funny?

I always wanted to make sure that the play didn't trivialize AIDS in any way. But people seem to be okay on that — so it's just that feeling of "Oh, my God!" that we won't be either punished or lectured to this evening. Plus I think there are all these moments in the play when the audience actually gasps or stops laughing and thinks, "Okay, after this we will not be allowed to laugh. It's gotten too serious." And then in 15 seconds, they are howling, and that kind of surprise is so gratifying for a writer because you really feel manipulative in the most satisfying way. You feel like "Oh, I made them do that" or "I made them turn a corner with the help of an insanely talented cast and director."

I Love Hamlet is opening in Berkeley.

I Hate Hamlet.

I Hate Hamlet has been done everywhere so it might very well be.

I was asked to bring up it because of this current production.

Oh, that's great. I Hate Hamlet has had this real life all over the world actually. I don't keep track of all the productions, but I get from this play service that publishes the acting edition a kind of computer print-out to find out where this thing is. There's been an Australian tour, a Canadian tour, a big Vienna premiere, and my favorite, a Japanese production. All over America as well. I think because people enjoy it and also because it's got one set. My advice to playwrights everywhere: one set and keep the "People are eager to learn how other people are coping. Or — especially now ten years along — how you adjust your perspective." — Paul Rudnick characters down. But in addition the [John] Barrymore legend has a real allure to it that people enjoy.

Has Drew [Barrymore] written you a fan letter?

No, but a friend of mine just interviewed Drew for Vogue and gave her a copy. She had not been aware of it, so it's just entered her life.

Your skin, by the way, is terrific. I couldn't believe that you wrote Poor Little Lambs because that credits ages you.

Ancient. Artifact.

Someone told me that the reason you're so attractive is that you're a chocolate fanatic.

I am. I believe... you know how any time they declare something is bad for you, if you wait six months, they will reverse the decision? So I decided to ignore all the experts.

I remember when I was little, it was always said that chocolate caused acne, and then they reversed that and said that's not true. I always loved the idea of being part of that test group. Did they rub Hershey bars on people's faces? What fun! So I decided that at the age of 3000, it will be discovered that my diet was the ideal and that pure refined sugar is the answer to longevity. I'll be like those people in Georgia in Russia who live on yogurt, but it'll be more like Snickers.

So anybody who wants to win your heart should show up at your door covered in chocolate. Black or white?

It has to be milk chocolate because I have the taste of a five-year-old, which means I only like the most cheeseball American products. ... I like M&M's and Hershey Kisses and Nestle's Crunch. I like the idea that it's shiny and completely artificially flavored and colored. I'm from New Jersey and I'm an American.

Actually that was the horrifying thing — I realized once that if you grow up on the artificial flavors, you prefer them. I grew up with Duncan Hines cakes, things like that, and Drake's. Then I had the real thing. When I had mousse or soufflé or something, I'd go "Ooooo! This doesn't taste like Pillsbury. Get it out of here." And you save money that way. And Sara Lee. This isn't for a religious publication? ▼

Star Quality

It's the kind of sound that evolves after years of singing together — 15 years in this case. They're able to joke onstage and, in the Boswell tune "We Couldn't Say Goodbye," laugh about their past fights and the several year "sabbatical" they took from performing and each other. During that time, Julie completed her master's in music, Sheilah released two CDs of original music, and Willow did commercials.

Singles Outing

Julie Nicholas belts out a wary and world weary "Never Make Your Move Too Soon" in her solo turn. Willow Wray puts just the right amount of squeak in her voice for her Connie Francis medley (complete with gold record corsage). And in a piece both funny (Frenchified English) and heartbreaking (an exquisite, breathy voice), Sheilah Glover's version of "These Foolish Things" is a highlight.

The McGuire Sisters' arrangement of "Blue Skies" modulates upward towards the roof, and "Stardust" circles out into space. Someone said, "They blend like a perfect Martini," and I can't put it any better.

The Coconut Room at Joe LaCoco's Ristorante at Drake's Landing features first-class cabaret acts like Nicholas, Glover and Wray and Sharon McNight. A good sound system and sight lines, excellent food plus a comfortable atmosphere make for a terrific evening. (Prix fixe dinner and show is $35, show only is $15.)

Great singers, accomplished comedienne; is there anything these women can't do? After years they're finally putting out a CD and music video. Their explanation: "We were waiting for the sound to be right." ▼

Reunion in Florence

Alex Kane 3: Deadly Lies by John Preston; Badboy/Masquerade, $4.95
B.M.O.C.
by Lars Eighner; Badboy/Masquerade, $4.95

by Tom Bacchus

Another tome in the sword and suckery genre, Sonny Ford's Reunion in Florence, set in the time of the Crusades, is mildly amusing, between beheadings, dismemberments, come, head jobs, and member worship. This always becomes an odd and grisly combo, blood and sperm spewing in the same setting, disturbing even if it is escapist pulp fiction.

Each chapter of Lars Eighner's B.M.O.C. is written in a quick, blunt style with none of porn's usual predictability.

Tristan and Adrian, lovers on the battlefield circa 1400 A.D., go boldly forth, only to be taken prisoner early in this tale. They are saved when, on line for a systematic beheading by the conquering Mamluks, they decide to couple for one last fling, on the dirt, in front of everyone. The ensuing circle of excitement by their captors saves their lives and all the others.

It doesn't stop their troubles, though, for the lovers are separated. Adrian is forced to be a galley slave on the ship that will take them to a new kingdom and endures a tortuous circumcision at the clumsy hands of his Mamluk captors. After healing in a prison, he meets Faisano, a Moslem daddy-type, with whom he copulates between bars in a holding cell. A eunuch spots their romance and the two are taken upstairs and strung up, only to suffer the Saturnalian tortures of the dickless chub queens.

After more trials and daring escapes, he becomes a soldier in the sultan's ranks. Adrian finally meets up with Tristan, who by now is the prize pet of the sultan, and vain to boot. He meets with Tristan repeatedly, engaging in two and three ways with the sultan's wife, since the sultan is "thus disposed toward his own sex" and can't get her pregnant. Tristan's seed is not only boff the queen (for duty), but Tristan as well (for love), and upon returning to his barracks, also goes at it with the jealous Omar, the sultan's young nephew.

If this sounds exhausting, it is. By this time most of the sex scenes are perfunctorily mentioned and not fully described. Nevertheless, the number of acts documented gives one pause to wonder if the narrator's equipment shouldn't have worn off by now or at least require a tune-up. The antiquated writing (dicks are called "engines" and "spears") and the episodic plot hamper what could be an amusing romp into faux-historic, queer erotic lit. But, as the introduction states, this is supposed to be an ancient document, a sort of queer Koran. Unfortunately, age alone does not make fine wine.

Action Epic

Somebody call Mike Ovitz. If those asshole producers really wanna make big bucks with films that are violent yet PC, sexy and media hot, they should film the stories of Alex Kane, John Preston's hunky, hung superhero.

Deadly Lies, Preston's third Kane novel, exposes the corrupt dealings and swindling of a Mafia-clinging politician. In a purely Machiavellian move toward the governor's mansion, the politician decides to unleash a campaign of venom against gays, but first he has a few horrid crimes committed just to spice things up and hypnotize the local media. It's a scary and all-too-realistic story, but hero Alex Kane is up for it, with the help of his multimillionaire father-in-law and his new lover Danny, the tumbling gymnast he saved from the hands of blackmailing pimps in Sweet Dreams.

The heroes take their time though, spending a lot of time fucking in a Vermont retreat, but they do get around to finally flying to the trouble spot, Minneapolis, questioning the latest victims, getting their names right, and then beating up the culprits one by one, all the way up to the top. We think.

Throughout, though, there's a related subplot that makes for a great ending twist. One of the pilots for Alex Kane's empire/private conglomeration that keeps track of the homophobes (a sort of Q Nation meets the FBI) is (ta dah!) gay. Inspired by the brutal murder of his lover, he comes out to his copilot. What they do with the big bad guy is a miles-high feat.

These stories have a fast and pulpy sort of speed to them. Imagine Lethal Weapon as played by Rex Chandler and a young Tony Danza.

Preston's adoration of this perfect loving couple verges on cloying, however. Each fuck scene is described in all its blissful perfection. Not to say that this is completely inappropriate. The relationship of Danny and Alex does, in this tale, reach a fruition that merits such bliss. The two men realize that they will spend the rest of their lives together, fire-bombing the warehouses of corrupt homophobes by night and humping like crazed beasts by day. Shouldn't a hard-working superhero duo's sex be as great as their violence?

Higher Education

In B.M.O.C. the heroism is in being an out-of-the-closet cocksucker in a closeted fraternity. It's more realistic in flavor, like Lay's potato chips. You want your creamy dip with just one, but feel compelled to savor the next load.

Each chapter of Lars Eighner's sex book is written in a quick, blunt style with none of porn's usual predictability. Each story follows our narrator, nicknamed Balls. He regales his conquests one by one, or more, depending on the size of the jerk-off parties. His penis is no weenie, either (thus the title's acronym for Big Man on Campus). Each episode, recounting the sexual zenith of his college years, stands firm as its own horny frisson but relates to the whole epic.

The outstanding quality of B.M.O.C. lies in the dialogue. Lots of it. Some stories are nothing but dialogue. The entire scene is set with a smell or a simple reference: dorm room, shower room, locker room, etc.

The talking is what gets these guys hot, and this is where B.M.O.C. has merit beyond mere pud-pounding pulp—for if men talked about sex more often, there'd be a lot less problems. B.M.O.C. has interesting tradeoffs with "straight" guys. The conversation runs the gamut of barely out virgins to uptight quarter-back closet cases with surprisingly roomy butts. Eighner's dialogue recalls Robert Chesley's plays, but with jock freshman gumption. From simple jack-off buds to elaborate team action (one with a ghost), full-till bondage and Halloween orgies, this book proves the pen a mighty sword in the battle of erotic satiation. In terms of immediate spunky fiction, B.M.O.C. shoots farthest. ▼
